EDITOR'S LETTER

The NFL 2001 puts on a happier face.

Dear Street & Smith's Pro Football reader:

What a difference a year makes.

When we last convened on this page, our report was nearly as much a reflected police blotter as it was previews and predictions for the 2000 season. Much has changed since, largely for the better.

For one, Ray Lewis—the excellent Baltimore Ravens linebacker and an icon with at least local fans—was a knee-deep suspect in a murder investigation following a bizarre incident immediately after Super Bowl XXXV in Atlanta.

Lewis was acquitted and—wonder of wonders—helped lead his team to a blowout victory in the Super Bowl.

For another, consider Kerry Collins of the New York Giants. There were no Class A felonies haunting him at this time last year. Just the fans' image of a guy boozing away great talent after fits, starts and failure in Charlotte, then New Orleans. But he figured out the reflection in his glass, and didn't like what he saw.

Collins acquitted himself brilliantly, leading the Giants—wonder of wonders—to the Super Bowl. And we know the rest of that story, taken in this context.

How I love irony. The original I-Man (Will Shakespeare, not Don Imus) could not have created such irony. But as Imus would say, "You can't make this stuff up."

Collins and Lewis are back, and clashed. On the field, Lewis won. Overall, Collins clearly won. And the recovering Kerry is "Back from the brink," as we've headlined our feature, beginning on page 28. Lenn Robbins has written a powerful piece that speaks for itself. I commend it to your attention.

And we've got other strong, uh, stuff. To wit:

"The Super Bowl sideshow," a showpiece by Pete Williams on all the hoopla and hype surrounding the game. It's an appetizing read, as you'll see, beginning on page 34. The only difference between the hoopla/hype of the Super Bowl and the Kentucky Derby is that the game takes three-plus hours, including rollout of some of the best/worst commercials on the planet. The race takes little more than two minutes (1:59 4/5 this year)—without commercial interruption.

We also take a good look at you, the people who pay the freight. The NFL fans. Based on a survey by G. Scott Thomas, we show that fans in the Midwest are the best, most loyal of all. And despite the not unexpectedly dreadful performance of the "new" Cleveland Browns, their fans are Super Bowl in every way. Please see page 46.

Then we have our XFL report, a first-time review of that wonderful new league. Well, here's the deal: our review was nipped in the bud by the league's demise, and we had to fill the space somehow. So we decided to appropriately memorialize it in a first-ever Street & Smith's editorial. It may be found on page 60.

As always, there's much more, of course. You have only to review the contents. And, we hope, enjoy!

LAST SEASON'S
SOME SURPRISING DISCOVERIES

By STATS Inc.

TO AIR IS DIVINE

Peyton Manning threw for an NFL-best 4,413 yards last season, but more than 1,500 of those came in the form of "YAC," or yards gained after the catch. Which passer, we wanted to know, threw for the most "air yards," or yards gained through the air, excluding yards after the catch? Lo and behold, it was again Manning on top. Here's a list of the quarterbacks who threw for the most air yards last season:

Most air yards, 2000

Peyton Manning, Ind	2,834
Daunte Culpepper, Min	2,621
Elvis Grbac, KC	2,525
Mark Brunell, Jax	2,358
Jeff Garcia, SF	2,263

As it turns out, the 1,500 YAC in Manning's total passing yards weren't inordinately high; Culpepper and Grbac both had their receivers pick up at least that many yards after the catch. But Manning, who led the league with 357 completions, threw completions that totaled more than 2,800 yards downfield, with 21 of his completions traveling 20 yards or more in the air.

Garcia and the 49ers, meanwhile, did something impressive last year. Garcia threw for 2,263 air yards, fifth-most in the league, and his receivers gained a league-high 2,015 yards after the catch. With the unheralded Garcia throwing to Terrell Owens and Jerry Rice, the 49ers' passing attack was quite prolific—both in the air and after the catch.

Who gains the longest yard?

What's the best way to pick up a critical yard on third-and-one or fourth-and-one? Quarterback sneak? Run up the middle? Run outside the tackle? One thing is for sure: The best way to pick up that yard in 2000 was to give the ball to Ahman Green. He leads a list of the most successful short-yardage rushers last season.

Highest first-down percentage, rushes on third-and-one/fourth-and-one, 2000 (minimum eight attempts)

Ahman Green, GB	92.9 (13/14)
Robert Smith, Min	90.0 (9/10)
Daunte Culpepper, Min	88.9 (8/9)
Drew Bledsoe, NE	87.5 (7/8)
Jay Fiedler, Mia	87.5 (7/8)

Picking up that elusive yard isn't all that easy, as shown by the fact that only two rushers with at least eight attempts managed to succeed 90 percent of the time. The Minnesota Vikings almost couldn't go wrong, whether they called a quarterback sneak for Culpepper, or handed off to Smith; the two combined for 17 successes on 19 attempts.

And a special kudos to Bledsoe, the not-so-nimble New England signal-caller, who not only was successful on seven of eight third- or fourth-and-ones last year, but also picked up his first-ever NFL rushing TD.

To scramble or not to scramble?

Led by youngsters Donovan McNabb, Daunte Culpepper and Aaron Brooks—along with a revitalized veteran in Rich Gannon—the NFL's quarterback of the millennium is advertised as a mobile, elusive scrambler. No longer, it is said, are pocket passers the league's best QBs.

How true is this notion? To check it out we looked at all quarterbacks with at least 100 passes in 2000, and divided them into two groups: those with more than one rush for every 10 passes thrown (the running QBs) and those with less than one rush for every 10 passes (the pocket passers). Here's how each group's passing numbers looked:

Running QBs vs. pocket passers, 2000

	Running QBs	Pocket Passers
Comp Pct.	58.1	58.7
Yards/Att.	6.77	6.84
TD/INT	261/176	350/315
Rating	0.9	78.0

From these numbers it's hard to give the nod to one group over the other. Pocket passers had the edge in completion percentage and yards per attempt, while the running quarterbacks possessed the better passer rating.

Perhaps the most surprising number is this: Stay-at-home QBs actually had a higher interception percentage than those of the running variety. You might think that throwing on the run would lead to more interceptions, but the stay-at-homes had a rate of 3.4 compared to 2.9 for the mobile QBs. Who says McNabb and Culpepper have to learn to stay in the pocket?

Daunte Culpepper

Who has the right touch?

You'd think it would be called the Marshall Faulk Award, or what the NFL should give to the running back who produces the most yards per touch (rushes plus receptions). But last season it wasn't Faulk who led the league, but rather the Jets' pass-catcher extraordinaire Richie Anderson:

Most yards per touch by running backs, 2000

Richie Anderson, NYJ	8.0
Larry Centers, Wash	7.0
Randy Jordan, Oak	7.0
Marshall Faulk, StL	6.6
Bob Christian, Atl	6.3

(touches = rushes plus receptions)

Anderson led the league largely because he was such an effective receiver who rarely ran the ball. Only 11 players in the league—10 wide receivers and one tight end—topped Anderson's total of 88 catches in 2000. Of course, pass plays—even dump-offs to running backs—will generally gain more yards than running plays.

In fairness to Faulk, he's the only running back on this list with as many as 50 rushes. While Anderson, Centers and Christian are almost exclusively pass catchers, Faulk is the lone feature back to make the list. He averaged 6.6 yards per touch last year despite rushing the ball 253 times, making Marshall's plan all the more impressive.

Offense, anyone?

Was the average St. Louis Rams game in 2000 the highest scoring ever? If you love offensive fireworks, you loved following the 2000 Rams. Consider this: The average NFL game last year saw a total of 41.3 points put on the board. The average Rams game produced a total 63.1 points—three more touchdowns than in an average game.

Only one team in NFL history has averaged a higher total of points plus opponent points in a season. The same Rams franchise, 50 years earlier, holds that honor:

Most combined points plus opp. points per game, season

	Pts/Gm	Opp Pts/Gm	Total
LA Rams, 1950	38.8	25.8	64.6
StL Rams, 2000	33.8	29.4	63.1
NY Yanks, 1950	30.5	30.6	61.1
San Francisco, 1965	30.1	28.7	58.8
Dallas, 1962	28.4	28.7	57.1

Of the five teams on our list, only the 1962 Cowboys failed to have a winning record. The 1950 Yanks and 1965 49ers had winning records but failed to qualify for the postseason. The 1950 Rams, led by Tom Fears, "Crazy Legs" Hirsch and Norm Van Brocklin, advanced to the NFL Championship Game. Appropriately, they lost a high-scoring affair (for those days), 30-28, to Cleveland.

Fifty years later, their mirror image, the Rams of Kurt Warner and Marshall Faulk, would lose to New Orleans in the playoffs by almost the same score, 31-28.

WHO BOOTS IT BEST UNDER PRESSURE?

On September 17 of last season, the Packers' Ryan Longwell hit a 38-yard field goal with three seconds left as Green Bay defeated the Eagles 6-3. On October 15, Longwell connected from 35 yards out with 54 seconds left, giving the Pack a 31-28 win over the 49ers. And in the season finale, Longwell broke the Buccaneers' hearts in overtime as he hit a 22-yarder.

Over the last three seasons, including regular season and postseason, Longwell has been the league's best field goal kicker in "clutch" situations (attempts in the fourth quarter or overtime with his team either tied or trailing by three points or less).

Ryan Longwell

BEST PCT. ON 'CLUTCH' FG ATTEMPTS—SINCE 1998 (includes regular season & playoffs; minimum six attempts)

Ryan Longwell	90.9 (10/11)
Jason Hanson	90.0 (9/10)
David Akers	85.7 (6/7)
John Hall	85.7 (6/7)
Morten Andersen	83.3 (5/6)

Longwell has come a long way since 1997, when he missed a potential game-winner for the Packers in just his second NFL game. The only clutch kick he has missed in the last three years was arguably not his fault, as the Bears' Bryan Robinson blocked his potential game-winner at Lambeau Field in November 1999. No wonder the Packers gave him a $7.5 million contract in the offseason.

RAVEN-OUS FOR OPTIONS

Where did opposing teams try to run against the Baltimore Ravens?

The numbers are downright grisly: 61 rushing yards per game on 2.7 yards per carry. That's all the Ravens allowed in the 2000 regular season. Did opposing offenses even have a chance against that run defense? Was there a particular spot where the Ravens were weakest?

This data excludes aborted plays and kneel-downs, with directions listed from the offense's perspective. "Left side" refers to plays off left guard and off left tackle.

Ravens rush defense by direction, 2000 regular season

Middle	125	384	3.01	0
Right End	29	80	2.76	1

If the Ravens' run defense did have a weakness, it was running plays wide to its right side (the offense's left end), away from defensive line standouts Tony Siragusa and Michael McCrary. Three of the five rushing touchdowns Baltimore allowed went to that area, and the yards-per-carry average was actually respectable. But consider that the Ravens stuffed 11 of the 41 rushes to the offense's left end—i.e., they stopped the ball carriers for losses. If you wanted to run against Baltimore last year, you could gamble on running wide to the left. You might gain some yards, but you might just as well be looking at second-and-12.

For an offensive coordinator, plays that gain big chunks of yards are exciting, but when it's first-and-10 you're content if your running back can simply pick up four yards. Indeed, if you could rush for four yards on every play, you'd move the ball all day long.

Last year, two running backs with at least 100 carries gained four or more yards on more than half their carries. We didn't necessarily find the league's biggest names among the five biggest gainers:

Backs with highest percentage of rushes gaining four yards or more, 2000

(minimum 100 rushes)

Marshall Faulk, StL	50.6
Tony Richardson, KC	50.3
Priest Holmes, Bal	48.9
Tiki Barber, NYG	46.5
Robert Smith, Min	46.1

The top two names on the list offer quite a contrast. You've got the Rams' glamorous Faulk, he of the 26 touchdowns and the speed to line up at wide receiver. Then there's Kansas City's bruising, 235-pound Richardson. Richardson had only seven rushes of more than 15 yards in 2000—compared to Faulk's 24 rushes of 16 or more—but Richardson was almost as reliable in picking up at least four yards per carry.

Do the Bucs buckle late?

Did Tampa Bay's defense get worn down over the course of games—or even halves—last year?

There's no doubt the Buccaneers had a pretty good defense in 2000. Tampa's defensive unit ranked ninth in the league and sent four players to the Pro Bowl. Yet there was a sense among some observers that the Buc defense was a little small, too reliant on speed and, therefore, susceptible to being worn down. The team's defensive stats by quarter bear this out:

Tampa Bay defensive stats by quarter, 2000

	Yds Allowed/Play	Pts Allowed
1st Qtr	4.10	39
2nd Qtr	4.61	79
3rd Qtr	4.38	53
4th Qtr	5.14	92

The numbers show that the Bucs' defense weakened over halves of games last year. Tampa Bay's 38 first-quarter points allowed was the league's fourth-lowest figure. The Bucs allowed more than twice that many, and an additional half-yard more per play, in the second quarter. The 53 third-quarter points allowed was 11th-best in the league, but the numbers in the fourth quarter dropped off considerably. Figure in the fact that the Bucs blew fourth-quarter leads in two of their losses, and you know they have an issue to address this season.

NFL

Reversible quarterbacks and NFL-issued do-rags are just two of the trends awaiting fans this season.

BY DON PIERSON, CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Q uarterbacks get more credit than they deserve when they win and more blame than they deserve when they lose.

How about no credit or blame at all? How about treating quarterbacks like reversible practice jerseys? How about pretending quarterbacks are like punters—necessary but interchangeable?

That's the look of the NFL in 2001. With not enough great quarterbacks to go around, all quarterbacks are going around like a merry-go-round.

Trent Dilfer, chastised in Tampa, won a Super Bowl in Baltimore and lived happily ever after—for a month. By the time he returned from Disney World, his locker was cleaned out, and it wasn't sent to the Hall of Fame. Dilfer was on the street, discarded by the Super Bowl champions in favor of Elvis Grbac.

That's the same Elvis Grbac who failed to stir teammates or fans in Kansas City.

"I'm going to take this team to a different level," Grbac says.

Doug Flutie was 21-9 as a starter for the Buffalo Bills. The Bills decided he needed to re-apply for the job. He lost out to Rob Johnson.

Flutie resurfaced in San Diego, where his job is to make rookie hotshot Drew Brees appear taller than 6 feet.

Flutie replaced the floundering Ryan Leaf, whose three-year nightmare mercifully ended for all involved. Leaf is now residing in Tampa Bay, as a third-stringer.

The Ravens, who won it all after Dilfer rescued Tony Banks, figured they can win with just about anybody taking snaps. So they courted Brad Johnson as well as Grbac and decided they would be happy with whomever accepted their offer.

Johnson ended up in Tampa, unseating young Shaun King. If Keyshawn Johnson can't make the difference, maybe Brad Johnson can. Johnson & Johnson, the Band-Aid boys.

The future is now, but not for Troy Aikman in Dallas. Three-time Super Bowl champion quarterbacks used to be carried off on their shields. Aikman fell on his sword, ignominiously cut by the desperate Cowboys, who didn't even have a successor in mind.

Everything is going to be all right, promised Cowboys owner Jerry Jones, but not in 2001. Jones became the NFL's first owner to publicly advise fans before the season even started: "Wait Till Next Year."

"One year from today, we'll see the effects I'm talking about," Jones says. "In today's NFL, having that type of cap room, you can turn a non-playoff team into a contender. We've seen four teams in the last two years end up in the Super Bowl when they weren't in the playoffs the year before."

Jones signed Banks, the same guy the Rams got rid of just before they won a Super Bowl and the Ravens benched just before they won a Super Bowl. He signed with the Cowboys for one year. That Jones knows his history.

The salary cap gets more credit than it deserves when you win and more blame than it deserves when you lose.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO...

THE MINNESOTA VIKINGS

They were there once again, on the brink of greatness, guided to an 11-5 NFC Central Division title by dean of NFL coaches Dennis Green. Then suddenly they were gone once again, humiliated by the New York Giants, 41-0, one game short of the Super Bowl.

Robert Smith retired.

John Randle is playing for Seattle.

Todd Steussie was released.

Dwayne Rudd was signed by Cleveland.

Randy Moss wondered whether he would ever win in Minnesota. But he's back. So is Cris Carter. So is Daunte Culpepper. So is Green. Another year, another cheer, another fear.

"We'll be better than we were last year," Green says.

GONE...

RON WOLF, Green Bay Packers' general manager, who salvaged a lost franchise, earned his $2 million-a-year salary, and expressed disgust at his profession for allowing television commentators too much influence in swaying public opinion and deciding such things as Pro Bowl players.

"This is the only business I know where you've got people who really know absolutely nothing about it getting guys into the Pro Bowl," Wolf says. "I'm talking about those commentators. We are judged by people who don't know (expletive) from shinola. They're all over TV on Sunday, on Monday, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. And they know nothing. They just talk. And that's who we're accountable to in this game now."

Wolf, 62, is now consulting.

HE'S CHANGED

MARTY SCHOTTENHEIMER couldn't figure out how anybody could work for Daniel Snyder. Not his style, he said. Owners should own, not meddle. Let the coaches coach.

A $10 million contract over four years allows for compromise.

At least Snyder admitted that firing Norv Turner wasn't the wisest thing he'd ever done. At least hiring Schottenheimer was Snyder's idea. At least Schottenheimer knows the owner is invested.

HE'S BAAAAACK

DICK VERMEIL got burned out again. This time, he got tired of retirement quicker than last time. Last time, it was 14 years. This time, it was 11 months.

The Kansas City Chiefs lured him back, to the surprise and chagrin of the St. Louis Rams, who now doubt his sincerity.

The Rams extracted a second-round draft choice from the Chiefs for Vermeil. They wanted a first-round pick for Vermeil's favorite quarterback, Trent Green.

"I don't know why I should keep helping them build their team," Vermeil says.

ARRIVED

MATT MILLEN, former Fox commentator, hired as president of the Detroit Lions for $3 million a year.

At least Millen was drafted by Ron Wolf and the Oakland Raiders in 1980.

NEW COACHES ON THE BLOCK

GREGG WILLIAMS, BUFFALO

His interview blew away new Bills General Manager Tom Donahoe, who was thought to be leaning toward Ravens defensive coordinator Marvin Lewis. Donahoe and Lewis know each other from their days with the Steelers. But Williams, defensive coordinator of the Tennessee Titans, gave Donahoe all the right answers.

MARTY MORNHINWEG, DETROIT ▶

Matt Millen interviewed only the offensive coordinator of the San Francisco 49ers, a job that is a good recommendation in itself. If the 49ers can turn Jeff Garcia into a top-rated passer, then there is hope for Charlie Batch. Maybe Mornhinweg should have brought the 49er trainers and doctors with him.

BUTCH DAVIS, CLEVELAND

He was a great college coach at Miami and seemed willing to accept the demotion to Cleveland. He resurrected a fallen and disgraced program for the Hurricanes. The difference is the Browns never have been alive. Davis must create, not resurrect. He will need more than the two measly years the Browns allowed Chris Palmer.

HERMAN EDWARDS, NEW YORK JETS

Coach of the defensive backs in Tampa, Edwards never has been a coordinator. Nevertheless, he quickly developed a reputation as a bright and promising protégé of Tony Dungy and was going to get a shot somewhere soon. Credit the Jets with grabbing him before somebody else did.

MORE THAN INTERIMS

DICK LEBEAU, CINCINNATI

At 63, LeBeau became the oldest coach to be named head man for the first time. Talk about paying dues. He was an underrated cornerback for the Detroit Lions and an underrated defensive coordinator for years. If his enthusiasm and sincerity don't wear off on his players, the Bengals need new players.

DAVE MCGINNIS, ARIZONA

Anybody who would turn down the Bears for the Cardinals proves he's not avoiding a challenge. The Bears thought he was their man in 1999 before a miscommunication blew up in their red faces. McGinnis went back to work for Vince Tobin, who was fired during the season. The Cardinals didn't exactly turn things around, but McGinnis is willing to keep trying.

THE HOLMGREN TREE

With all due respect to Bill Walsh, who hired Seattle coach Mike Holmgren in San Francisco, has any coach ever had five men he brought into the league work as head coaches at the same time? Holmgren hired Green Bay's Mike Sherman, Detroit's Marty Mornhinweg, Oakland's Jon Gruden, Philadelphia's Andy Reid and San Francisco's Steve Mariucci. In 1985, Mariucci served part of a season as a quality control coach for John Robinson and the Los Angeles Rams, but it was under Holmgren that Mariucci and the others had their first full-time NFL jobs.

PUT UP OR SHUT UP

◀KEYSHAWN JOHNSON AND WARREN SAPP, TAMPA BAY

The Buccaneers are running out of excuses and time and patience. If this team isn't as talented as the Baltimore Ravens, neither Johnson nor Sapp would have reason to talk. With Brad Johnson and Simeon Rice joining the mix, it's time to get it together.

RANDY MOSS AND CRIS CARTER, MINNESOTA

They play in the same division as the Bucs, so something has to give. The Vikings knock on the Super Bowl door every year and nobody answers. Moss and Carter have one last chance together. If Carter plays in 2002, he will have stayed a year too long.

COACHES ON THE HOT SEAT

DICK JAURON, CHICAGO

After two years, 11 wins and several false starts with young quarterback Cade McNown, the capable Jauron finds his future ominously linked to potentially the next Ryan Leaf. Jauron admitted he overestimated McNown's progress last year. Now it's make-or-break for both.

DAN REEVES, ATLANTA

Not many people can understand why Reeves continues to put himself through the grind. That heart medicine ad couldn't be worth the aggravation. The longer he stays, the harder it becomes for Falcon fans to remember they did get to a Super Bowl together.

DAVE CAMPO, DALLAS

Jerry Jones wouldn't be so quick to brag anymore about those 500 candidates out there eager to coach his team. But Chan Gailey got only two years and Campo is not likely to get many favors, even with a depleted roster.

GEORGE SEIFERT, CAROLINA

Seasons of 8-8 and 7-9 aren't what the winningest coach of all time had in mind when he came out of retirement in San Francisco. Now he's behind Vince Lombardi and John Madden and may not get the chance to work his way back up.

MIKE RILEY, SAN DIEGO

TOM COUGHLIN, JACKSONVILLE

One losing season like last year does not a hot seat make, but if the Jaguars don't bounce back big-time, owner Wayne Weaver might decide Coughlin has taken this team as far as it plans to go with him.

DENNIS GREEN, MINNESOTA

He was 11-5 last year, better than anyone imagined. A 41-0 loss in the NFC title game won't change owner Red McCombs' view of him. But in Minnesota, the dean of NFL coaches is on perpetual trial.

CAROUSEL

ELVIS GRBAC, RAVENS

He completed 59.6 percent of his passes in Kansas City. Trent Dilfer completed 59.3 percent of his passes in Baltimore. Grbac threw touchdown passes on 5.1 percent of his attempts. Dilfer threw touchdown passes on 5.3 percent of his attempts. This is progress? Probably. Grbac throws fewer interceptions.

TONY BANKS, COWBOYS

Beaten out by Dilfer in Baltimore, Banks replaces Troy Aikman in Dallas. The Cowboys like his big arm. It fits their vertical passing game. They envision long bombs to Joey Galloway and Rocket Ismail. They ignore the fumbles. Nobody fumbles more than Banks.

DOUG FLUTIE, CHARGERS

After Ryan Leaf, San Diego will put Flutie on such a pedestal he'll look like a giant. But think of this, Charger fans: Haven't you had your fill of ex-Bear quarterbacks. There was Bobby Douglass back in the pre-Dan Fouts days. Then there was Jim McMahon, Jim Harbaugh, Moses Moreno, now Flutie. Chicago isn't exactly a cradle of quarterbacks, you know.

BRAD JOHNSON, BUCCANEERS

His arm isn't as strong as, say, Leaf's, but it's stronger than, say, Shaun King's. The last Johnson, Keyshawn, was not the answer. Maybe this one is. If not, it's time to sign Lee Johnson and punt.

MATT HASSELBECK, SEAHAWKS

Matt who? He sat nicely on the bench behind Brett Favre, which is recommendation enough for Mike Holmgren and anybody else who watched Ron Wolf draft quarterbacks. Mark Brunell backed up Favre. Kurt Warner backed up Favre. Ty Detmer backed up Favre. Aaron Brooks backed up Favre. Make way for the next free-agent find, Henry Burris, the Canadian Football League star now backing up Favre.

JON KITNA, BENGALS

Maybe he'll beat out Akili Smith, maybe not. Maybe he'll beat out Scott Mitchell, maybe not. Maybe Mike Holmgren made a mistake, maybe not. Maybe the Bengals are desperate, maybe not.

QUARTERBACK

JAMES MCKNIGHT, WR, DOLPHINS:
Wide receiver has size, speed and upside after 52-catch Dallas stint. Remember Jimmy Smith?

JAMES THRASH, WR, EAGLES:
He was more productive and much lower-maintenance than former Redskin receiving teammate Albert Connell.

CHAD EATON, DT, SEAHAWKS:
As a kid, he loved Seattle's Joe Nash. That incentive, plus playing on same line with John Randle, will pay dividends.

DEREK SMITH, MLB, 49ERS:
Underappreciated in Washington amid the so-called superstars, Smith will blossom.

DENARD WALKER, CB, BRONCOS:
Titans didn't want to lose him, especially to an AFC contender. He will upgrade an area of dire Denver need.

TODD STEUSSIE, LT, PANTHERS:

MARCELLUS WILEY, DE, CHARGERS:
Bruce Smith's replacement in Buffalo did so well that new San Diego GM John Butler took him with him.

RAY LUCAS, QB, DOLPHINS:
There are observers of the New York Jets who wonder why this guy didn't get the ball from Vinny Testaverde last year.

ERIC MOULDS, WR, BILLS:
Has developed into a top five receiver and will be Rob Johnson's best friend.

DERRICK MASON, WR, TITANS:
The Titans have been searching for a receiver and found one under their nose.

MARCUS POLLARD, TE, COLTS:
Colts franchised a second-string tight end, but they know what they're doing.

MATT BIRK, C, VIKINGS:
On an all-star line, he quickly became the most valuable player.

WILL SHIELDS, G, CHIEFS:
Guards are usually underappreciated and underpaid. Not this one.

DEXTER COAKLEY, LB, COWBOYS:
The Cowboys normally ignore linebackers, then pay for it later.

JOHN MOBLEY, LB, BRONCOS:
He was subpar last year, but vital to the Denver defense.

DARREN SHARPER, S, PACKERS:
He came through big-time in contract year, just as planned.

OLINDO MARE, PK, DOLPHINS:
Miami had to overpay, but kickers everywhere are happy to greet the first $2 million-a-year man to the fraternity.

FREE-AGENT FOLLIES

SIMEON RICE, DE, BUCCANEERS:
All he does is rush the passer, which may be all the Bucs want or need for a year. Have sacks, will travel.

ALBERT CONNELL, WR, SAINTS:
New Orleans had great success last year with unwanted merchandise, but the Saints might be pressing their luck with this unhappy camper.

MATTHEW HATCHETTE, WR, JETS:
He's big, like Keyshawn Johnson used to be. He played behind Randy Moss and Cris Carter, so he can't be all bad. But is he dependable enough to take the next step?

LEON LETT, DT, BRONCOS:
Dallas bad boy has experience playing "Mile High." Denver needs to revive him.

KENNY HOLMES, DE, GIANTS:
Like Rice, not an every-down player. Titans upgraded when they traded for Kevin Carter.

ROSS VERBA, OT, BROWNS:

TONY WILLIAMS, DT, BENGALS:

BUDDING COACHES

SEAN PAYTON, OFFENSIVE COORDINATOR, GIANTS: Giants defensive coordinator John Fox got the interviews, but Payton got raves, too.

GREG KNAPP, OFFENSIVE COORDINATOR, 49ERS: This job is a sure steppingstone. See Holmgren, Shanahan, etc.

GARY KUBIAK, OFFENSIVE COORDINATOR, BRONCOS: Some year the right job is going to become available.

TEAMS TO WATCH

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES:

If Donovan McNabb keeps getting better, there's no way the Eagles can be kept from a title game.

DENVER BRONCOS:

Once Brian Griese and Terrell Davis get healthy at the same time, watch out.

SHANNON SHARPE, TE, BALTIMORE

Loud and proud, Sharpe was the real MVP on the Super Bowl champions. Not only did he lead the Ravens in receptions, rescuing Trent Dilfer and a lost offense, he became a mentor and friend for linebacker Ray Lewis from the time he worked out with him during Lewis's Atlanta trial.

RAVENS DEFENSE

Their outstanding, record-breaking season was impressive, but it hardly puts them in the same class with the Pittsburgh Steelers' Steel Curtain, not after shutting out such luminaries as Kent Graham, Scott Mitchell, Tim Couch and an injured Troy Aikman. Wait another Super Bowl or two.

YES, WE HAVE NO BANDANAS

The do-rag is a don't-rag. In the never-ending fight for a cleaner image, the NFL banned bandanas this season, but will allow team-issued "skull caps" for players who don't want their helmets to mess up their hairdos. The Ravens are drawing straws for who tells Ray Lewis.

WHO'S OVERPAID?

The vastly overpaid and overrated defensive tackle class of 2000, or why so many veterans were released and why teams were so happy to see a draft full of good defensive tackles.

- Santana Dotson, Green Bay ($5,100,000)
- Cortez Kennedy, Seattle ($4,692,500) ▶
- Ted Washington, Buffalo ($4,662,500)
- Chester McGlockton, Kansas City ($4,130,000)
- Sean Gilbert, Carolina ($3,750,000)
- Dana Stubblefield, Washington ($3,571,825)
- Leon Lett, Dallas ($3,400,000)

JOB INSECURITY

The top-paid linebacker, Pittsburgh's

- ▼ Levon Kirkland ($5,495,000), the top-paid defensive end, Minnesota's John Randle ($7,750,000) and the top-paid safety, Baltimore's Darren Woodson ($3,675,783), all were released by their teams after last season.

- Dorsey Levens, Green Bay ($4,900,000/224 yards) ▲
- Mike Alstott, Tampa Bay ($4,666,667/465 yards)
- Corey Dillon, Cincinnati ($3,000,000/1,435 yards)
- Edgerrin James, Indianapolis ($2,988,572/1,709 yards)

COMING ON STRONG

JAMAL LEWIS, RB, BALTIMORE:

BRIAN URLACHER, MLB, CHICAGO:

Plays where Bill George, Dick Butkus and Mike Singletary made Hall of Fame.

SAMARI ROLLE, CB, TENNESSEE:

Deion Sanders is a name from the past.

LA'ROI GLOVER, DT, NEW ORLEANS:

Led league with 17 sacks and still works at it.

TERRELL OWENS, WR, SAN FRANCISCO:

Hot-dogging notwithstanding, might be as good as Randy Moss.

JERRY RICE: Nobody retires by choice anymore—but they should.

DEION SANDERS: The question remains. Can Deion cover Jerry?

EMMITT SMITH: Still averaged 4.1 yards per carry, but Walter Payton Fan Club wants him to follow the other Smith, Robert, into retirement.

VINNY TESTAVERDE: If the Jets still want him, why should he quit?

ANDRE RISON: Bad Moon waning, but don't tell him out loud.

The Majesty of Michael

The Falcons are in love with the idea that trading up to get superathlete Michael Vick will revitalize the franchise.

By Anthony L. Gargano

Sell him. Sell the arm and the bewitching moves and the Hokie lore. Sell the soft eyes and the polite ways and the fact that he will buy his mother a "big, new house with all the trimmings" with his first check. Sell the youth, the exuberance. Sell the vision. Push the potential.

Sell him on every Peachtree Street and Buckhead corner and barber shop and Dunkin' Donuts. Sell the notion, and microwave it. Forget football details—he is a little short for a quarterback, the Hokie lore consisted of only 20 games, he threw only 313 passes in college, he is historically not the kind of quarterback Dan Reeves loves. Sell a superstar, even if he is a bigger mystery than Atlanta's Super Bowl year of '98—the NBA does with every 18-year-old who can dunk.

Sell him. Save a franchise.

The "idea" of Michael Vick works fine. In fact, it is probably the smartest thing the Atlanta Falcons have done since firing Jerry Glanville. For if any franchise in the King's League needs an identity it is the Atlanta Falcons, who couldn't muster any momentum from a Super Bowl run three years ago and phenomenon called the Dirty Birds. Go to a Falcon game in the cavernous Georgia Dome and the idea of Michael Vick makes sense. There is nothing sadder in sport than silence in a dome. Forty thousand "shhhhs" and the rest are a day late for Georgia Tech football.

So for a couple of draft choices and a Tim Dwight, the Falcons reinvented themselves, which is to say they invented themselves. For a change, there is a buzz in the "Worst Sports Town in America." Go figure. The World Series for a decade couldn't do it, nor Dominique Wilkins, nor something called the Thrashers.

NFC EAST

NEW YORK GIANTS B

You've got to admire that Ernie Accorsi. The Giants had one major problem area and the sage GM worked a fine deal to land CB Will Allen, who will help an ailing secondary pronto. Accorsi also took a shot on corner William Peterson, a problem child who transferred from Michigan to Western Illinois. It's a gamble in the third round, but he's got the size and skills to be a standout if he's smart. After giving Kenny Holmes $20 million, the Giants didn't need to take project DE Cedric Scott in the fourth round. QB Jesse Palmer could be a pleasant surprise down the line, but the Giants failed to address their pressing need at tight end.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES B

Donovan McNabb finally gets a playmaker besides himself. Enter UCLA's Freddie Mitchell, who said in February: "If the combine is a meat market, then I'm filet mignon." A kid with that kind of moxie will go over the middle for you. Last year the Birds' receivers were ground chuck, so Mitchell ought to make an immediate impact. Watch out for second-round pick Quinton Caver, a play-making linebacker who could push for a starting job on the outside. DE Derrick Burgess could be the end to Mike Mamula—which in itself is a good thing—but he is a bit undersized. RB Correll Buckhalter backed up at Nebraska, but he has breakaway speed and can catch the ball out of the backfield.

WASHINGTON REDSKINS B

Daniel Snyder couldn't mess up this one. The Skins desperately needed a wideout and the draft gods offered Clemson's Rod Gardner at No. 15. Gardner, a tall, sleek receiver who should have gone higher, is Pro Bowl-caliber and might prove better than David Terrell or Koren Robinson. He'll start right away opposite Michael Westbrook. New coach Marty Schottenheimer's good fortune spilled into the second round, where CB Fred Smoot fell all the way to 45 because of off-the-field questions. With Deion Sanders back in baseball and Darrell Green playing the role of Methuselah, Smoot also should contribute right away. On the flip side, explain the selection of QB Sage Rosenfels in the fourth round when the Skins had no third-rounder?

DALLAS COWBOYS F

The Cowboys, without Troy Aikman, are hurting. Their first-round pick went for Joey Galloway and his broken leg, and their second-round pick (QB Quincy Carter) was a reach around the state. So was their second No. 2, S Tony Dixon, and third-round DT Willie Blade has a worrisome shoulder. It's time to repent, Jerry Jones—and hire a real GM.

ARIZONA CARDINALS C

Arizona's interior defense proved a marshmallow treat for opposing running backs last season, so why pass up stud tackle Gerard Warren? Leonard Davis, who will move from tackle to guard, should make life safer for Jake Plummer. But it's about defense in the NFC East, specifically beefy boys in the middle of the line to stop Emmitt, Duce, Tiki and Stephen Davis. DE Kyle Vanden Bosch is a hustle guy but may lack big-play capability for a high second-rounder. CB Michael Stone and S Adrian Wilson could help the secondary and Bill Gramatica should become 'Zona's kicker, but don't look for an awakening in the desert anytime soon.

NFC CENTRAL

TAMPA BAY BUCCANEERS B+

It's not quantity that makes this grade so high. It's all about one man: Kenyatta Walker. One of the great mysteries of this draft was how the stud Florida tackle fell all the way to No. 14. Tampa made the big trade last draft to land Keyshawn Johnson and didn't hesitate to move up nine spots to nab the 6-4, 311-pound Walker. If the Bucs had one weakness besides the quarterback last year, it was protecting him on the outside, and Walker will be there for the next 10 years. The rest of Tampa's draft is shaky, beginning with undersized CB Dwight Smith in the third round. But after adding Brad Johnson and Simeon Rice through free agency, it was all about fine-tuning for the Super Bowl.

GREEN BAY PACKERS C

Ex-GM Ron Wolf's final draft should help in the long run. The Packers needed a wide receiver badly and passed up on Rod Gardner, but they did get a fine pass rusher in DE Jamal Reynolds from Florida State. Reynolds should start out of the box. We'll see about Texas A&M's Robert Ferguson in the second round. Ferguson is the big WR target that Brett Favre loves, but he's a project. LB Torrance Marshall was also a gamble in the third, having tested positive for marijuana in the combine. Guard Bill Ferrario isn't the most physically gifted lineman, but he's a solid pick in the fourth round.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS C

It's no secret the Vikings needed a running back with the retirement of Robert Smith. The Vikes chose Wisconsin's Michael Bennett, who has breakaway speed and the same questions regarding his toughness off-tackle as Smith did when he came out of Ohio State. Bennett will work out, but defense will remain a sore subject in Minnesota. DE Willie Howard is solid and versatile, but it's doubtful he'll ever be that big-play guy. Meanwhile, CB Eric Kelly and DT Shawn Worthen were reaches.

DETROIT LIONS B

Here's an easy prediction: Matt Millen will turn out to be a terrific team president. Millen centered his draft on giving QB Charlie Batch a chance and got a foundation at tackle in Michigan's Jeff Backus. He is exactly Millen's type of guy: smart and tough. Center Dominic Raiola will be another good choice once he becomes comfortable pass blocking in the West Coast offense. Raiola, who was rated the best snapper in the draft, spent most of his time bulldozing holes in run-happy Nebraska. The Lions then took a shot late in the second round on Texas DT Shaun Rogers, who is recovering from ankle problems. He's a stud when he's healthy. It may not be this year, but it's about the future for the Lions now.

CHICAGO BEARS C+

It's hard to pass up such a great talent in Michigan's David Terrell, and he'll make an immediate impact if Cade McNown can find reality. But the Bears were deep at wideout and could have really used a big-time running back or defensive end. The 49ers traded up to snatch away DE Andre Carter, who would have looked real nice in front of Brian Urlacher. The Bears went Michigan again in the second round with the A-Train, but here's the question: Was Anthony Thomas a product of the Wolverines' stellar offensive line? The quiet pick of Notre Dame OG Mike Gandy could turn out to be a steal. Another to watch is seventh-rounder John Capel, the Olympic sprinter whom the Bears would love to have stick as a return man.

NFC WEST

ST. LOUIS RAMS A

The Rams became a Super Bowl contender again over draft weekend. St. Looie dealt backup QB Trent Green to the Chiefs for the 12th pick and Miami DT Damione Lewis, who fits better than having to score 48 a game to win. Lewis is extremely quick, a penetrator who makes plays, big plays, something the Rams were used to giving up on defense. Using their other two No. 1s, the Rams beefed up with SS Adam Archuleta, who should complement Kim Herring well—and DT Ryan Pickett. Don't know about Pickett so high, though he does have some upside after leaving Ohio State after his junior year. Florida State LBs Tommy Polley and Brian Allen in the second and third rounds, respectively, give the Rams some speed at the position, and keep one eye on Washington State WR Milton Wynn, who proved to be an underrated threat in the Pac-10. The Rams also get praise for trading draft picks to Arizona for veteran CB Aeneas Williams.

NEW ORLEANS SAINTS D

Taking another running back two years after trading away the franchise for one—so what if it was Ditka—is really hard to swallow. Deuce McAllister is a good pick if he stays away from those pesky hamstring pulls that kept him out of practice at Mississippi. But now you add an injury-prone back to the ultimate heartbreak back in Ricky Williams? Who knows? Maybe Ricky goes to baseball or wrestling or Hollywood and coach Jim Haslett is a genius. LB Sedrick Hodge has the physical ability to succeed, but what about the game-smarts? DT Kenny Smith was a reach in the fourth round and DT Ennis Davis bombed out last year at USC.

CAROLINA PANTHERS C+

Once upon a time, back in the mid-'90s, this franchise was born on defense. It staved off the growing pains of expansion and, shortly thereafter, landed in the NFC Championship Game. Enter Miami LB Dan Morgan, who finally gives the docile Panther defense some bite. He's got the attitude of Kevin Greene and can flat-out play. So can DT Kris Jenkins, who may also start right away. Now for the flip side: Chris Weinke. Because the Panthers have no quarterback (Jeff Lewis), Weinke may also play right away. Not good. Much was made of Weinke's age at Florida State, but that didn't stop him from unraveling in big games.

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS B

Bill Walsh's final draft appears to be a solid one. The old sage certainly put in the effort. He traded up to steal DE Andre Carter from the Bears and give the 49ers some life on defense. Lord knows they needed it. Carter is not only a solid football player but he also brings an attitude that hasn't been there in three years. LB Jamie Winborn from Vanderbilt may be a bit undersized but he won't miss a tackle, and Pitt's Kevan Barlow was a value in the third round, especially with Charlie Garner bidding adieu. He can run it up the middle and has enough speed to turn the corner and can catch the ball out of the backfield.

ATLANTA FALCONS C

Visions of Akili Smith? Michael Vick has tremendous moves, but does he understand the position well enough? It's not like he played in a sophisticated offense at Virginia Tech. But with his athletic talent, can you blame the Falcons? Alge Crumpler will be a quality TE and Purdue's Vinny Sutherland replaces Tim Dwight nicely.

AFC EAST

NEW YORK JETS B

If anybody will be a hit on Broadway, it's Santana Moss, who should have no problem complementing Wayne Chrebet on the other side. Yes, he's small (5-9). Yes, too, he makes plays. Perhaps the Jets didn't have to trade up to get Moss, but GM Terry Bradaway and coach Herman Edwards get solid grades on their first draft together, because Maryland RB LaMont Jordan, Penn State OT Kareem McKenzie and Georgia CB Jamie Henderson will all contribute next season. Prediction: Edwards, the former Tampa assistant, will star in the "Miracle of the Meadowlands II" in the coming years.

INDIANAPOLIS COLTS D

The Colts think Reggie Wayne is the guy to play alongside Marvin Harrison. The former Miami WR ran the most precise routes of anyone in the draft and he's got the hands, but didn't Jerome Pathon? Meanwhile, what about the secondary? FS Idrees Bashir's stock soared because of his size and speed, but he's still a project. DB Cory Bird was a terrible reach in the third round, and don't look for any help from fifth-round DB Raymond Walls.

MIAMI DOLPHINS B

The Dolphins really like Wisconsin CB Jamar Fletcher to join the strong cover likes of Sam Madison and Patrick Surtain. With Jason Taylor back in the fold after flirting with free agency (love that franchise tag), go ahead, try and throw on the Dolphins. The Fish had trouble throwing on anybody. Perhaps Ray Lucas will beat out Jay Fiedler, and second-round pick Chris Chambers will provide him a viable target. Chambers has all the physical tools; we just didn't see enough of him in the Badgers' run-oriented offense. One pick to watch: DE Otis Leverette, a sixth-rounder out of Alabama-Birmingham who could be a real sleeper as a pass rusher.

BUFFALO BILLS B+

There aren't many better architects in the game than Tom Donahoe. Case in point, this year's draft. Donahoe was shrewd trading down in the first round and still coming out with his man: Ohio State CB Nate Clements, who may be the best cover guy in the draft. The Bills needed an influx of young talent and also came away with fine DE Aaron Schobel from TCU, a solid RB in Tennessee's Travis Henry and some beef up the middle in DT Ron Edwards. Donahoe is best in the middle rounds, so watch out for North Carolina LB Brandon Spoon, who should have went higher, and Notre Dame S Tony Driver. Ohio State's Reggie Germany was a steal late in the seventh round.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS C+

So the Pats needed some help for Drew Bledsoe and came away with DT Richard Seymour. To be fair, New England's interior defense played soft for opposing rushers last season and Georgia's Seymour has the physical ability to make a difference. But he took too many plays off for the Dawgs. The Pats did add numbers, beginning with OLs Matt Light and Kenyatta Jones to bolster a terrible offensive line. CB Brock Williams should play right away in the nickel, and TE Jabari Holloway was a good value in the fifth round.

AFC CENTRAL

BALTIMORE RAVENS C

The Ravens get high marks for their off-season acquisitions. Elvis Grbac is certainly an upgrade and Leon Searcy remains a force at tackle, and not losing Jamie Sharper and Rod Woodson is huge. Baltimore's draft is about one good man: Arizona State TE Todd Heap, who was a gift at No. 31. Brian Billick likes to play a two-tight end set and Heap is the perfect complement to Shannon Sharpe. Second-rounder Gary Baxter will provide some quality depth at corner, but it gets very thin the rest of the way. Wisconsin's Casey Rabach has a chance to see time somewhere on the offensive line.

TENNESSEE TITANS C

The Titans didn't have a first-round pick because they traded it for DE Kevin Carter. That's all good. A change of scenery will do Carter good and playing opposite Jevon Kearse will get him back in the teens for sacks. Now is Utah CB Andre Dyson, brother of Titan wideout Kevin Dyson, worth a second-rounder? He made some plays for the Utes but he also took a lot of chances. TE Shad Meier's stock soared close to draft day. Some had the Kansas State product rated as the No. 3 tight end. Be wary of such players. Pick to watch: Fourth-rounder Justin McCareins, a wide receiver from Northern Illinois who has good speed and great instincts for the ball. He could have been overlooked in such a deep draft of wideouts.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS C

The Steelers wanted to address defense early in the draft. Makes sense after years of being ravaged in the free-agent market. But we're not sure about DT Casey Hampton from Texas, especially when you already have Kimo von Oelhoffen in the middle of that 3-4 scheme. Georgia LB Kendrell Bell is a great pick. Bell, who knows how to lay a hat on people, will slide right in and play. Temple OT Mathias Nkwenti in the fourth round was a bit of a reach, though the Steelers rebounded nicely with Purdue C Chukky Okobi in the fifth.

JACKSONVILLE JAGUARS C

The Jags were given a gift when they hit the clock with OT Kenyatta Walker and OG Steve Hutchinson still alive. Go figure. They passed on both. That's what happens when you fall in love with a player. The Jags wanted Georgia DT Marcus Stroud all along and were undeterred by other possibilities. Stroud should be a player, but the offensive line is suddenly shaky in front of Mark Brunell, especially now with the loss of Leon Searcy. Michigan's Maurice Williams will be a fine contributor at OT once he learns how to play in the league. We're split on the third-rounders: S James Boyd from Penn State will help more than weakside LB Eric Westmoreland.

CINCINNATI BENGALS B

The Bengals scored more in the first two rounds than they did all season with DE Justin Smith and WR Chad Johnson. The 6-4, 267-pound Smith, who is only the seventh player ever to have his number retired at Missouri, finally gives the Bengals a playmaker on defense. Meanwhile, Johnson kept falling and falling. He ends up right beside Peter Warrick and new quarterback Jon Kitna, giving the Bengals an offense other than Corey Dillon. TE Sean Brewer has great speed but he went a little high at No. 66.

CLEVELAND BROWNS B+

Believe in Butch? We do. We also like DT Gerard Warren, who is one of the few sure things in this rookie crop. K-State's Quincy Morgan is a gamble in the second round, but he could pay off into a great player. There's not a lot of middle ground here. Overlooked and underrated is Miami RB James Jackson, who is not afraid to pick up that extra yard and could be a better pro than Anthony Thomas. The Browns also hit on South Florida DB Anthony Henry, who represents value in the fourth round. ETA for the Browns: 2003.

AFC WEST

OAKLAND RAIDERS C

What is it about the Raiders? No matter who's in charge, their draft mind-set is a little odd. It doesn't get much better than Jon Gruden, but S Derrick Gibson at No. 28 was extremely questionable. The safety spot killed them in the postseason, but Gibson played roverback at Florida State and made very few big plays. While Gruden may make Marques Tuiasosopo into an NFL quarterback, the Raiders could have certainly landed him a round later. DE DeLawrence Grant is a project pass rusher who he could wind up being worth more than a fourth-rounder, and WR Ken-Yon Rambo in the seventh was thievery considering he had once been projected as a potential second-rounder.

DENVER BRONCOS B-

One of these days, the Broncos will get it right in the secondary. It's obvious they are still uneasy with last year's first-rounder, Deltha O'Neal, since they signed Denard

Walker as a free agent and promptly drafted Willie Middlebrooks with the 24th overall pick. Middlebrooks is big and physical but does have a history of injury problems. Meanwhile, DE Paul Toviessi could see time on passing downs, but why go with another DE (Reggie Hayward) in the third when he was a bit of a reach? Denver ranked 24th in punting last season, so Cal's Nick Harris should win that job in camp.

SAN DIEGO CHARGERS B-

Call the Chargers "scared straight." After such a colossal disaster with Ryan Leaf, who can blame the Bolts for dealing out of the top spot and the questionable Michael Vick, especially when they get a legitimate running back in LaDainian Tomlinson. Anybody who doesn't think Tomlinson is a better bet than Vick isn't paying attention. The Bolts were most fortunate when Drew Brees lingered to No. 32. Many question Brees' potential at the next level, but you can't question his mentality. He's Big Ten-tough and ran an elaborate offense in college—the necessary ingredients to make it. CB Tay Cody, however, was a stretch in the third round and LB Carlos Polk is more of a project.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS A

It's finally coming together for Mike Holmgren. Three years into it, he needed to retool, but what a way to do it. He grabs a can't-miss receiver in Koren Robinson, who is only 20 and has the long body to thrive in the West Coast offense. Then comes OG Steve Hutchinson from Michigan to solidify the line in front of new QB Matt Hasselback. Hutchinson was a flat-out steal. Then comes a solid CB in Ken Lucas, who may win the job opposite Shawn Springs. Then the Seahawks wind up the first day with Heath Evans, who was the best fullback in the draft. Evans also is built for the West Coast offense. Finally, in Seattle, a big day.

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS C-

Dick Vermeil parlayed much of this draft for his quarterback (Trent Green), which was certainly a wise move. DE Eric Downing from Syracuse in the third round, however, wasn't so shrewd. Downing went at least two rounds higher than expected. Meanwhile, Florida State WR Marvin "Snoop" Minnis likely won't play much either his rookie season. The pick to watch is fifth-rounder Derrick Blaylock, the speedy RB out of Stephen F. Austin who could be a major sleeper. ■

By LENN ROBBINS
New York Post

Kerry Collins stood before the media in Tampa last January like a sheet on a clothesline. Every stain was there to be seen. Let the neighbors talk.

Collins wanted it this way. He wanted to talk about the past, his drunken, soiled past.

Perhaps only a fellow addict could appreciate the guts Collins displayed just a few days before Super Bowl XXXV. But anyone who has been knocked down, counted out, had a setback, screwed up or let others down knows how he felt a few weeks after getting pummeled 34-7 by the Baltimore Ravens.

Strengthened by his bumpy ride from substance-abuse center to NFC championship, Giants quarterback Kerry Collins now has one remaining addiction: the need for a Super Bowl ring.

the brink

Just weeks after his horrendous 15-of-39 passing performance for a mere 112 yards and four interceptions, Collins went home to Pennsylvania to reclaim his driver's license. It was the license he lost after his drunk-driving conviction in 1998 at Charlotte. "It was great," Collins said. "You feel like a man again. Almost, it's like freedom, empowerment."

Oh, you expected the recovering alcoholic (Collins acknowledges he will always be a recovering alcoholic) to fall off the wagon after getting folded, spindled and mutilated by the Ravens? You thought wrong.

With his license in hand, Collins bought himself a new Chevrolet Silverado. Too bad cars have a reverse gear, because Collins has no intention of going back to that dark point in his life when his only light was in a bottle. The bottle contained a demon, not a genie. The bottle controlled his life.

That's the way it is with addictions. You're out of control and the liquor deceives you. It makes you feel like you're in control. You think you can control the liquor, the way a quarterback is supposed to control a game. Down and distance. Move the chains.

It doesn't work that way, just as virtually everything the Giants tried in the Super Bowl didn't work against one of the best defenses of all time. The only points the Giants scored came on a Ron Dixon kickoff return.

Life after the blowout

Kerry Collins wasn't in control. Now it was the Ravens who were the demon in the bottle.

"First of all, Baltimore is very good," Collins said about a month after his Super Bowl defeat. "And I got frustrated because I couldn't find a way to crack them. There are gambles you consider on every passing play, but you have to make the right decisions. Frustrated, I didn't make good decisions. That still stings me a little, but I've recovered from that. My mental state is fine."

Yes, Collins has recovered. The way he handled the weeks after the Super Bowl gives Giants fans reason to believe that the $15.9 million gamble that General Manager Ernie Accorsi took on Collins, when he signed him as a free agent before the 1999 season, won't be blown on expensive scotch.

It is March 1 and Collins is in Manhattan at the Rusk Institute of Rehabilitation Medicine, surrounded by children with disabilities; children who are cheering for him. He has just presented a $100,000 check ($57,000 of which is his own money) toward the construction of a computer center.

You still have questions about Kerry Collins? His coach doesn't.

"Kerry Collins took the New York Giants to the Super Bowl, but that's not the success story," said Jim Fassel. "The success story is what Kerry Collins is today."

Today, Collins is the losing quarterback in Super Bowl XXXV and the winning recovering addict. He says he hasn't watched a tape of the game; doesn't need to. He knows the pass he tried to force into coverage and was intercepted and returned 49 yards for a touchdown by Duane Starks was an act of frustration.

The Kerry Collins post-Super Bowl question was, "How did you deal with your latest frustration?"

"I was outside relaxing," Collins said. "It's not like I sat alone in a darkened room for three days without talking to anyone. But I wasn't seeking out highlights of the game and I didn't have to hear any conversation about it. I knew what was being said, that we got wasn't on the same page. The family had a falling out, although they had a reunion at the Super Bowl.

While his support system was crumbling around him, Collins was excelling on the field. He led Penn State to an undefeated season in 1994 and Nittany Lion coach Joe Paterno's first-ever Rose Bowl triumph. He was drafted by the Carolina Panthers and led them to the NFC Championship game in just his second season.

And he drank, which is accepted behavior in any "Jocktown." He drank and, like the seams on an old football, life started to unravel for Collins.

Down and out in New Orleans

His play declined. He had a falling out with Panthers coach Dom Capers and actually asked to be taken out of the starting lineup. He got cut and signed with the New Orleans Saints. Mike Ditka figured he would be the coach who would turn around the "lost soul," as Collins described himself.

Iron Mike found out it wasn't that easy. When the Saints were to play the Panthers, Ditka allowed Collins to skip the game. Collins went back to Charlotte. He still didn't think he had a problem.

But then there was a cop shining his flashlight in Collins' face one night and asking for a license and registration. There was the drunk-driving conviction. There was an NFL-mandated stay in a substance-abuse center.

Collins started to see the light. He checked in two weeks before his scheduled arrival date at the center.

'Kerry Collins took the New York Giants to the Super Bowl, but that's not the success story. The success story is what Kerry Collins is today.' —Jim Fassel beat pretty bad, which we did. And that I played terrible, which I pretty much did."

The making of an alcoholic

This is the new Kerry Collins, the guy who looks you in the eye as he answers the tough questions. There are no more darkened rooms or corner bars. There are no more drinking binges with teammates, like the one in Charlotte when Collins foolishly used a racial slur thinking it would somehow endear him to the very players he alienated.

How did he find himself on such a darkened road? Substance-abuse experts will tell you there is no one route. Nor does the journey have a clearly marked starting point.

Collins' parents had their share of problems. Dad wanted him to be a stud quarterback and moved him from one Pennsylvania high school to another. Mom

"To go somewhere in a structured, controlled environment to receive help was certainly very shocking to me," Collins said the Tuesday before the Super Bowl. "That's a feeling I'll never forget and one that keeps motivating me to keep doing what I'm doing."

Before the Giants signed Collins, Accorsi called Paterno. Paterno vouched for Collins. Two years later, Collins led the Giants to the NFC title. He says there's no going back. The Ravens know the taste of champagne. Collins just wants a sip of victory.

"Sometimes you just have to analyze it and realize that you got outplayed," he said. "And to get better, you've got to accept that but put it behind you. There are other important things you can do in life."

Like live it clean and sober.

Let the neighbors talk.

With scads of celebrities to view, dozens of parties to attend and mounds of shrimp to eat, who has time for the NFL's championship game anymore?

The Super Bowl
Sides

Sting

By Pete Williams

Kurt Warner glanced over his shoulder, then looked upfield. As the crowd roared, he found his blockers, then darted 20 yards until he ran into ... hundreds of cans of Campbell's Chunky Soup.

Warner, the star of Super Bowl XXXIV at Atlanta in 2000, had returned to the big event in 2001, this time for one of the countless events that render the game itself all but a sideshow. Here he was, in a ballroom at the Tampa Convention Center, wearing a generic red jersey and squaring off with fellow Campbell's spokesman Terrell Davis. ESPN's Joe Theismann, dressed as a referee with very good hair, provided color commentary to a group of cheering schoolchildren.

Thirty years ago, the Super Bowl was little more than a football game. These days, it's a weeklong, over-the-top, shameless display of celebrity worship and corporate excess. Says Warner: "It seems like the football game is the last thing on your mind."

SHOW

If you're a fan looking to go to the game, plan to fork over at least $1,500 for a scalped ticket with a $325-$400 face value—if you can find one. Remember, though, the Super Bowl is not about regular fans; it's about the rich and famous flexing their connections. It's about corporate barons pretending to be celebrities, actors worshipping athletes and athletes sucking up to actors.

Where else can you find Aerosmith and 'N Sync sharing a dais to discuss their mutual admiration? Or Jay Leno darting from party to party like a college kid out on fraternity row? Or a non-sports figure like MTV personality Carson Daly holding court everywhere? Or veteran rocker Sting, a native of England, posing awkwardly in a quarterback's stance and trying to explain to a group of fawning entertainment "journalists" how he'd never be invited to perform at a soccer match in his native country.

"Having bands play in England wouldn't go over very well," Sting says. "It gets in the way of the fighting."

Tampa: the 'Survivor' Bowl

It's not necessarily an A-list event. After all, most top celebrities do not want to mingle with the general public, even if the general public at the Super Bowl is mostly the famous and the "almost famous." Most of the "celebrities" are of the 15-minutes-of-fame variety, such as the latest boy band du jour or the castaway stars from "Survivor."

In Tampa, it was hard to attend a party or event without running into one of the castaways from the original "Survivor," no doubt capitalizing on the one year they were big enough to be invited. After all, does anyone expect the fame of people like Richard Hatch, Gervase Peterson or Jenna Lewis to last until Super Bowl XXXVI in New Orleans? (Let's hope not.) Then again, the Super Bowl also attracts the formerly famous such as the rock group Styx, on hand last year to perform after what seemed to be a two-decade hiatus.

Lewis, the sexy survivor who reportedly turned down $500,000 to pose for Playboy, seemed to have perfectly captured the Super Bowl mentality. Not only was she a modest celebrity, she was also one of 3,300 credentialed members of the press, "covering" events for an entertainment network.

No Super Bowl angle, it seems, is too obscure to warrant coverage. In recent years, USA Today has sent an army of 13 reporters and six photographers—not including Lewis, an occasional contributor—to make sure the "nation's newspaper" does not miss a single moment of exaggerated Americana.

Radio ga ga

For Super Bowl XXXIV in Atlanta, the NFL issued 3,476 credentials to 857 news organizations. Many seem to represent sports radio stations, which occupy much of the lobby at the Super Bowl media center. Anyone with even a hint of celebrity status knows better than to get anywhere near "radio row" during Super Bowl week.

Better to hang out at the many parties. Not that celebrities linger long at the ice sculpture-and-shrimp affairs. The idea is to accumulate a stack of glossy, hologramed, anti-counterfeit invites, then spend evenings traveling through town by limousine, stopping just long enough to make a grand entrance, then a quiet exit through a side door.

Super Bowl

At one time the NFL commissioner's party was the premier event. It's still a lively affair, with jugglers and painted models and tons of high-priced catering. But true insiders find their way to the exclusive, out-of-the-way parties hosted by Playboy and Maxim magazines, where supermodels and superbabes are the main attractions. Or to the Saturday afternoon gathering hosted by sports agents Leigh Steinberg and Jeff Moorad. Usually held outdoors at a top area attraction, it's a staggering display of silicone, hair gél and Ray-Bans. As consultants for the movie "Jerry Maguire," the agents use the event to further blend sports and entertainment.

Celebrity death march

While the two participating teams must deal with a daily onslaught of media attention, hundreds of other NFL players come to town to be worshipped for a week, eat mountains of shrimp, play video games and, like Warner and Davis, fulfill their sponsor requests.

Most of the 'celebrities' are of the 15-minutes-of-fame variety, such as the latest boy band du jour or the castaway stars from 'Survivor.'

Only at the Super Bowl can you attend a party hosted by the likes of EA Sports and find Ricky Williams sitting in front of a monitor navigating his video counterpart downfield. Or attend the NFL Players' Association party—sponsored by video game maker 989 Sports, of course—and see Emmitt Smith and Daunte Culpepper chatting with LL Cool J and Tyson Beckford.

Appealing to the proletariat

Of course, to get the true NFL experience, it helps to attend the

NFL Experience, an NFL merchandise store

thinly disguised as a football carnival.

Usually constructed in a series of tents and AstroTurf fields next to the host stadium, the event is touted by the NFL as the next-best thing for fans who cannot attend the game itself.

Translation: a way for the league to make money from folks not rich or famous enough to attend the Super Bowl.

For a mere $15, fans can fight crowds, see a few NFL exhibits, navigate their way through a cavernous tent of NFL merchandise, and pay $6 for a small chicken sandwich or hamburger. Come to think of it, that really is the NFL experience.

With so much going on, is it any wonder that the game itself often fails to live up to expectations? If nothing else, it's mostly a welcome break in the host city following six days of corporate schmoozing, although the hospitality tents in the parking lot remain open for corporate VIPs hours after the game ends.

New York Giants cornerback Jason Sehorn seems to have mastered Super Bowl week. He's marketed himself effectively to the corporate world, obtaining numerous endorsements, and appeals to the "Access Hollywood" crowd through his relationship with actress Angie Harmon. After spending six Super Bowls attending parties and being just another celebrity, he became perhaps the biggest star of all by actually playing in the game last January.

Jason Sehorn

No matter that Sehorn had a terrible Super Bowl in the Giants' embarrassing loss to the Ravens. After all, the week is now as much about building visibility as it is building a game plan.

"I liken it to the circus," Sehorn said, adjusting a baseball cap with one of his sponsors' logos so that it would appear in view of cameras. "It's the biggest show in the world."

With a necessary new premium on athleticism, today's most successful NFL quarterbacks have to be bigger, faster and stronger than their counterparts.

By Pete Williams

It was only a few years ago that a player with the speed and athleticism of Donovan McNabb would be converted into a defensive back or a wide receiver in the NFL. Daunte Culpepper, all 6-4, 260 pounds of him, might have been shifted to defensive end.

Now, after a 2000 campaign in which the two dominated NFL defenses like few other second-year quarterbacks had before, they're at the forefront of league-wide transformation in the pocket. Instead of looking for traditional, drop-back passers, teams now are searching for versatile players equally adept at avoiding the rush and scrambling.

The transition might have gone unnoticed by the casual football fan. After all, Trent Dilfer and Kerry Collins, a pair of one-dimensional, lead-footed passers, squared off in Super Bowl XXXV in January. Besides, any era of the NFL has included at least a few Fran Tarkentons and Steve Youngs, scramblers who could throw on the run. But only recently have many NFL teams begun to build around faster, more-athletic players.

Mobility

"(Vick is) capable of scoring a touchdown every time he touches the ball," says FOX football analyst John Madden.

Jeff Garcia

Daunte Culpepper

"You've got three mobile quarterbacks (in the Pro Bowl) and that says a lot about where the game has gone in the past few years."
—Donovan McNabb

New breed steps up

It's perhaps no coincidence that players such as Troy Aikman and Vinny Testaverde are either retiring or winding down their careers at the same time a younger, faster group of quarterbacks is taking over the league. Consider this year's Pro Bowl rosters. While Brett Favre and Kurt Warner stayed home, the NFC squad was represented by Culpepper, McNabb and San Francisco's Jeff Garcia, another athletic, scrambling quarterback.

"You've got three mobile quarterbacks (in the Pro Bowl) and that says a lot about where the game has gone in the past few years," says McNabb, 24. "The game has changed where now you have guys who are able to move around in the pocket to find their receivers and be more involved in the offense."

Involved? McNabb accounted for three-fourths of the Eagles' offense in 2000, passing for 3,365 yards and 21 touchdowns and rushing for 629 yards and six touchdowns to lead Philadelphia to its first playoff berth in five seasons. Culpepper, a third-string quarterback as a rookie who was considered a long-term project before the 2000 season, threw for 3,937 yards and a league-high 33 touchdowns, while rushing for 470 yards and seven touchdowns.

Garcia passed for an NFC-best 4,278 yards and 31 touchdowns in his second NFL season, while rushing for 414 yards and five more scores. Not bad for a five-year veteran of the Canadian Football League, which some NFL personnel types have long dismissed as a minor league with its smaller, run-oriented quarterbacks presumed to be neither big enough nor strong enough for the NFL.

But just as Warner proved in 1999 that the fast-paced Arena Football League could serve as good preparation for the NFL, Garcia might have shown last season that the modern NFL quarterback is not all that unlike his CFL counterparts. "Certain stereotypes are put out there as far as what scouts would like to see from players and they forget about what actually takes place on the field," Garcia says.

Vick could offer new standard

It's not just guys like McNabb and Culpepper breaking the stereotypes. Long before he was made the No. 1 pick of the 2001 NFL Draft by the Atlanta Falcons, Michael Vick was touted as the next player to revolutionize the position. Vick runs the 40-yard dash in 4.25 seconds, faster than many running backs and wide receivers.

"He's capable of scoring a touchdown every time he touches the ball," says FOX football analyst John Madden. "I really believe that the quarterback of the future in the NFL is going to be more about running, along with being able to throw the ball."

"(Culpepper is) bigger than I am," says Giants defensive end Michael Strahan. "It's like trying to tackle myself."

A preview of the NFL future might have come during this year's Gator Bowl, when Vick squared off against Clemson's Woodrow Dantzler. Already the shift to more athletic quarterbacks in the pros has had a trickle-down effect to the college ranks as coaches imitate the success of NFL teams.

"If you look at guys like Culpepper and McNabb and what they can do, it's really going to open up the quarterback position in college football," says Clemson coach Tommy Bowden. "You'll start to see a lot more shotgun teams with athletic quarterbacks."

Staying one step ahead of the rush

Part of the change is by necessity. A quarterback in 2001 must be quick enough to get past speedy, 245-pound linebackers like Ray Lewis and also withstand the pounding of 300-pound linemen such as Warren Sapp. While quarterbacks still need the arms of Hall-of-Famers such as Len Dawson and Johnny Unitas, they're required to be faster and quicker.

Not surprisingly, the new-age quarterbacks have the all-around skills to thrive in other sports. McNabb was a reserve on the Syracuse University basketball team and has incorporated his roundball fakes and jukes into his football game. Culpepper, a three-sport star in high school, was recruited by the University of Kentucky basketball team and drafted by the New York Yankees.

"If you look at guys like Culpepper and McNabb and what they can do, it's really going to open up the quarterback position in college football," says Clemson coach Tommy Bowden.

Vick has not played organized baseball since high school, but that didn't stop the Colorado Rockies from taking a flyer on him in the 30th round of the 2000 Major League Baseball Draft.

"When you can run like him, our feeling was he could cover some ground for us in the outfield," says Rockies Scouting Director Bill Schmidt. "Michael Jordan tried baseball. Maybe (Vick) might want to make a run at it."

Daunte's dominance

There might be no better example of the evolution of the quarterback than Culpepper, who is believed to be the largest full-time quarterback ever in the NFL. Besides throwing the ball up to 85 yards, he can bench-press 400 pounds and squat more than 500. He can dunk a basketball and even has three-point range.

Culpepper's size and speed allow him to brush aside some pass rushers to buy time in the pocket or run over linebackers while rushing. Unlike most quarterbacks who slide rather than take a hit, Culpepper is sometimes the one delivering the punishment.

"He's bigger than I am," says Giants defensive end Michael

Donovan McNabb

Steve McNair

Strahan. "It's like trying to tackle myself. He doesn't just scramble, he fights for the first down."

Before the 1999 draft, some teams dismissed Culpepper, who played his college ball at tiny Central Florida, as being too big to play quarterback at the next level. Not Minnesota's Dennis Green, who saw him as the epitome of the next generation of NFL signal-callers.

"Quarterbacks keep getting bigger and more athletic and he is leading the way," Green says. "I think he brings the whole idea of what the NFL is going to be for probably the next 10 or 12 years."

Erasing stereotypes

In another era, Culpepper and McNabb might not have gotten a chance to play quarterback in the NFL. Doug Williams, the only black quarterback to start a Super Bowl until Steve McNair led the Tennessee Titans there two seasons ago, suggested as recently as the early 1990s that racism played a role in the lack of quarterback opportunities for black players.

Back then, statistics seemed to back Williams' claims. As recently as 1994, Florida State star and Heisman Trophy winner Charlie Ward opted for the NBA rather than change positions in the NFL. But last season eight black quarterbacks started in the NFL.

"It's a changing of the guard," says
Warren Sapp.
Players have gotten bigger and faster at every position . . ."

"It's great to see because 20 years ago these guys weren't getting a chance to play," says Tampa Bay Buccaneers coach Tony Dungy, a quarterback at the University of Minnesota in the 1970s and a defensive back in the NFL. "I thought I could have played after looking at some of the quarterbacks who played when I played defense."

McNabb bristles at the suggestion that he's an athletic quarterback, as if he gets by on spin moves and speed alone. "When I hear someone say 'running quarterback,' that sort of upsets me," he says. "That takes away from my drop-back abilities. I'd rather be known as a quarterback who happens to be athletic."

Chidi Ahanotu has no problem with that description. After McNabb demolished the Buccaneers in the first round of the 2000 playoffs, the then-Tampa Bay defensive end was left shaking his head. "With all the dimensions he brings to the table, he might be the best quarterback in football right now. How do you stop him? How do you slow him down? I wish I knew."

It's a question NFL defenses might have to answer more often. Just as the 1983 "Quarterback Draft" of Dan Marino, Jim Kelly and John Elway forever changed the face of football, the class of 1999 with Culpepper and McNabb could signal the beginning of a new era.

"It's a changing of the guard," says the Buccaneers' Sapp. "Players have gotten bigger and faster at every position and you're now seeing a whole new generation of players. Why should the quarterbacks be any different?"

A new study on NFL fan support shows what many fans in the Midwest have been saying for years—they're the best.

By G. Scott Thomas

Street & Smith's SportsBusiness Journal

The Cleveland Browns limped into 2000's final home game on December 17 with a 3-12 record and a four-game losing streak. Yet, Browns Stadium still sold out.

The Kansas City Chiefs were a mediocre 6-8 when they took the field the same day to wrap up their home schedule. And Arrowhead Stadium was sold out.

The Green Bay Packers had only a microscopic chance of qualifying for the playoffs in their final home game. The wind chill was minus 15, it was Christmas Eve ... and Lambeau Field was sold out.

Such loyalty is the reason why Cleveland, Kansas City and Green Bay swept the top three places in a study of NFL fan support conducted by Street & Smith's SportsBusiness Journal, a sister publication of Street & Smith's Pro Football.

We set out to identify the NFL's best fans. Not the ones who turn out in strong numbers for a winning team, but the ones who stay loyal even if their team is losing, the weather is frightful or their local market is small.

Cleveland fans earned first place by routinely filling their stadium despite the dismal play of the Browns, who have won only five of 32 games since returning to the league in 1999. Kansas City and Green Bay both posted winning records during the last decade, but they earned high marks for drawing capacity crowds despite small markets and bone-chilling weather.

Rounding out the top 10 are the Philadelphia Eagles, New York Giants, Cincinnati Bengals, Washington Redskins, Denver Broncos, Buffalo Bills and Baltimore Ravens.

Each NFL team's performance was analyzed in seven categories for the period of 1991-2000, including average attendance, stadium capacity, on-field record, area population, ticket prices, weather and the difference in attendance for winning and losing seasons.

The top team, Cleveland, was awarded an overall score of 100 points. All other scores were based off of that benchmark.

Twenty-four of the 31 NFL franchises operated throughout the 10-year study period. One exception was Cleveland, whose seven-year record was a combination of the old Browns, who moved to Baltimore after the 1995 season, and the new Browns, an expansion franchise that began play in 1999.

The six teams that have less than seven years in their current markets—Baltimore, Carolina, Jacksonville, Oakland, St. Louis and Tennessee—had their scores reduced on a sliding scale, offsetting the statistical impact of the honeymoon period enjoyed by most new franchises.

At the bottom of the rankings are the Tennessee Titans, who relocated from Houston in 1997. The Titans have played to capacity crowds since opening Adelphia Coliseum at Nashville in 1999, but the study also considered Tennessee's severe box-office problems during its first two seasons.

Cleveland top dog in NFL pound

Team-by-team analysis

1. Cleveland Browns

Strengths: The old and new Browns share a record of on-field ineptitude, winning about one-third of their games since 1991. But their fans have been remarkably loyal. Cleveland is one of five NFL cities to draw more than 70,000 a game during the last decade.

Drawbacks: No visible problems now. But how long will Cleveland's savvy fans put up with a bumbling expansion team?

Bottom line: Art Modell might disagree, but the Browns clearly enjoy the best fan support in the NFL.

2. Kansas City Chiefs

Strengths: The Chiefs have packed 76,047 per game into Arrowhead Stadium since 1991, the top figure in the league. Only 7 percent of their seats went unoccupied during their worst year of the decade, 1998.

Drawbacks: The loyalty of Chiefs fans hasn't been tested too strenuously. The team's win percentage for the decade is a robust .613.

Bottom line: Kansas City is a relatively small market that stands tall at the box office.

3. Green Bay Packers

Strengths: This is the NFL's smallest—and coldest—market. Yet Green Bay keeps packing Lambeau Field. Packers fans filled 97.7 percent of seats during the last 10 years, second only to Philadelphia. Every season since 1994 has been above 98 percent.

Drawbacks: One question looms: Can tiny Green Bay continue thriving as the cost of doing business in the NFL skyrockets?

Bottom line: The Green Bay metro area has just 200,000 residents, yet it holds its own with the league's giants.

4. Philadelphia Eagles

Strengths: Pick your adjective. Philadelphia fans can be loud, abusive and hostile. But they're also loyal. The Eagles play before a full house every Sunday, hitting 99.5 percent of capacity since 1991.

Drawbacks: Sellouts aren't as difficult in Philadelphia as in most NFL cities. The market is one of the league's largest, and tickets are relatively affordable.

Bottom line: The Eagles have been inconsistent on the field, but their fans have always been among the NFL's best.

5. New York Giants

Strengths: The Giants have drawn 72,414 per home game since 1991. Only Kansas City, Denver and Buffalo rank higher in average attendance. Year-to-year fluctuations at Giants Stadium have been mild.

Drawbacks: Who couldn't draw well in New York? The metro area has 20 million residents. That's 100 times larger than Green Bay.

Bottom line: The Giants easily win the battle of the Meadowlands. They rank fifth in fan support, while the Jets are 14th.

6. Cincinnati Bengals

Strengths: This is the toughest NFL team to support, ranking first in difficulty factors. The Bengals' 10-year winning percentage is a pitiful .294. Cincinnati is among the league's smallest markets and tickets are costly. However, fans have filled 85 percent of seats since 1991.

Drawbacks: The Bengals haven't ranked among the 20 best teams in per-game attendance since 1992.

Bottom line: Cincinnati fans deserve a collective medal for outstanding performance under adversity.

7. Washington Redskins

Strengths: A new facility worked wonders in Washington. The Redskins led the NFL in attendance last season. And they've been in the top 10 every year since FedEx Field opened in 1997, despite consistently missing the playoffs.

Drawbacks: Attendance holds fairly steady from year to year in NFC East markets such as Dallas, Philadelphia and New York—but it fluctuates a bit more in Washington.

Bottom line: This season's Redskins weren't the best team that money could buy, but their fans did well.

8. Denver Broncos

Strengths: Color them blue and orange. Denver fans have filled 73,371 seats per game since 1991, second-best in the NFL. That works out to 96.3 percent of capacity at Mile High Stadium, sixth in the league.

Drawbacks: How hard is it to be a Broncos fan? The team has a .625 win percentage and two Super Bowl titles in the last decade.

Bottom line: Denver is a great pro sports town, also supporting baseball's Rockies and hockey's Avalanche in style. But the Broncos are the local favorite.

9. Buffalo Bills

Strengths: Only the hardiest souls can withstand a winter wind whipping off Lake Erie, but Buffalo fans are up to the challenge. The Bills' average attendance since 1991 is 72,930 per game, third in the NFL.

Drawbacks: The team's winning percentage of .613 has made it considerably easier for fans to brave the gales of December.

Bottom line: Green Bay is the only NFL town that's colder. Only two markets are smaller. Yet Buffalo is annually among the league's box-office leaders.

10. Baltimore Ravens

Strengths: The Ravens have been around for five years, filling 96.4 percent of seats despite an on-field mark of .456. They've ranked 10th in per-game attendance each of the last three seasons.

Drawbacks: Locals don't like to admit it, but support for the Colts gradually eroded in the early 1980s. Will the same eventually happen to the Ravens?

Bottom line: Art Modell traded No. 1 Cleveland for No. 10 Baltimore. Not a great deal, but not a terrible one, either, when you consider he got a Super Bowl ring out of it.

11. Dallas Cowboys

Strengths: Cowboys fans are consistent. They filled 99.6 percent of Texas Stadium in 1995, their best year of the decade. And they occupied 96 percent in 2000, their worst year. The fluctuation of 3.6 points is the NFL's smallest.

Drawbacks: Times are tougher now, but the Cowboys were so good for so long that rooting for them has been relatively painless.

Bottom line: If the current rebuilding effort fails, will Dallas' fan support hold? The rest of the league is eager to see.

12. Chicago Bears

Strengths: The "Monsters of the Midway" are a distant memory. Recent Bears teams have been lousy (.419 winning percentage in the last decade), yet Chicago fans have filled a respectable 86 percent of seats at Soldier Field. Year-to-year fluctuations have been moderate.

Drawbacks: The arrow is pointing downward. The Bears have ranked 26th or worse in attendance each season since 1997.

Bottom line: Bears fans have endured a long dry spell, but they seem to be losing their patience.

13. Jacksonville Jaguars

Strengths: This young franchise has prospered on the field and at the gate. Its per-game attendance of 67,291 ranks eighth in the NFL for the decade. And that's despite the fact that Jacksonville is the league's second-smallest market.

Drawbacks: The Jags slipped out of playoff contention last season, and attendance slipped, too. Jacksonville ranked 20th in attendance in 2000.

Bottom line: Will Jacksonville fans remain loyal to a losing team? The jury is still out.

14. New York Jets

Strengths: The Jets have drawn 65,429 per game since 1991, placing them ninth in the NFL. That's particularly impressive because the Jets had the league's sixth-worst winning percentage during the decade at .425.

Drawbacks: See the Giants' entry above. There's no reason why the Jets, blessed with America's biggest market, shouldn't sell out every week.

Bottom line: The good news is the Jets ranked fourth in attendance in 2000. The bad news is the Giants were third.

15. Miami Dolphins

Strengths: The Dolphins rank sixth in average attendance, drawing 69,043 per home date during the last decade. That translates to 93.2 percent of capacity, the NFL's 11th-best mark in that category.

Drawbacks: It really isn't that difficult to be a Dolphins fan. The team is usually competitive (.588), and the weather is the league's warmest.

Bottom line: Miami is between Florida's other NFL teams in fan support. Not as good as Jacksonville, but considerably better than Tampa Bay.

16. San Diego Chargers

Strengths: Chargers fans must overcome imposing obstacles, such as steep ticket prices (the NFL's fourth-highest compared to local income levels) and generally poor teams (1-15 in 2000, .431 winning percentage since 1991).

Drawbacks: Just 14 franchises failed to sell at least 90 percent of their tickets during the decade. The Chargers (86.7 percent) were among them.

17. St. Louis Rams

Strengths: The honeymoon continues for the Rams, who relocated to St. Louis from Los Angeles six years ago. The team has played to 95.5 percent of capacity at Trans World Dome, the seventh-best mark in the NFL.

Drawbacks: Why wouldn't St. Louis support its team? The Rams are still fairly new to town, they have an explosive offense and they won the Super Bowl two years ago.

Bottom line: Rams fans would rank higher, but their loyalty really hasn't been tested yet.

18. Indianapolis Colts

Strengths: The Colts have filled 90.5 percent of their seats since 1991, even though Indianapolis is the seventh-smallest market in the league. An additional impediment is the team's .431 winning percentage for the decade.

Drawbacks: The RCA Dome is the NFL's smallest facility, keeping the Colts' per-game attendance down to 53,876 for the decade. Just five teams have averaged less.

Bottom line: The dome is almost 20 years old. How long before the Colts ask for a new facility?

19. Carolina Panthers

Strengths: The market is small and tickets are costly, yet the Panthers have had a few good years at the box office. They ranked fifth in attendance in 1996 and 10th a year later.

Drawbacks: Most years have been worse, capped by 22nd place in 2000. The Panthers have played to just 83.1 percent of capacity since starting play in 1995. Only four teams are lower.

20. Pittsburgh Steelers

Strengths: Pittsburgh fans have filled 93.4 percent of Three Rivers Stadium's seats during the last 10 years, a figure surpassed by only eight teams. Year-to-year fluctuations are mild.

Drawbacks: It's usually not a strain to root for the Steelers. Tickets are reasonable by NFL standards, and the team wins more often than not (.581 for the decade).

Bottom line: Pittsburgh fans consider themselves to be true die-hards. The painful reality is that they're below average.

21. Detroit Lions

Strengths: The Lions have finished as high in the attendance derby as third in 1995 and fifth in 2000. Their per-game average since 1991 is 68,334, seventh in the league.

Drawbacks: Detroit's attendance isn't so impressive when you consider that its ticket prices are second-lowest in the NFL, its market has a population of 5.5 million and the Pontiac Silverdome is climate-controlled.

Bottom line: Fifteen percent of the seats at a typical Lions game are empty. Detroit should do better than that.

22. San Francisco 49ers

Strengths: Attendance at 49ers games has averaged a solid 64,241 during the 10-year period. And only four teams have registered smaller year-to-year fluctuations than San Francisco.

Drawbacks: The 49ers are the easiest team to root for, ranking last in difficulty factors. San Francisco has a 10-year winning percentage of .656, the best in the NFL.

Bottom line: We finally may find out what 49ers fans are made of now that their salary-cap-ravaged team has hit the skids.

23. New England Patriots

Strengths: True Patriots fans have persevered despite mediocre football (.450 for the decade), an out-of-the-way stadium, a threatened franchise move and weather that's often nasty.

Drawbacks: The problem is a lack of true fans. Only 53,327 make their way to Foxboro for the typical game, worse than all but four franchises. Fluctuations between good and bad years have been sharp.

Bottom line: Boston is a top 10 market in terms of size, but it's in the bottom 10 in fan support.

24. Seattle Seahawks

Strengths: The Seahawks have had successful years at the box office. Like 1999, when they filled 99.9 percent of seats. Their 10-year mark of 84.7 percent isn't too bad, considering their .419 win percentage.

Drawbacks: But there have been some really awful years, too. Take 1995 and 1996, for instance, when more than 30 percent of the late, unlamented Kingdome was empty.

Bottom line: Inconsistency is Seattle's biggest problem. Only six teams have suffered sharper fluctuations in attendance.

25. New Orleans Saints

Strengths: This season's playoff run rekindled interest in the Saints. New Orleans finished 19th in attendance in 2000, up 10 places from the previous year.

Drawbacks: New Orleans is one of five teams to average fewer than 60,000 per game since 1991, play to less than 85 percent of capacity and fluctuate more than 40 percentage points from its best year to its worst.

Bottom line: The Saints weren't anything special during the 1990s. Neither were their fans.

26. Minnesota Vikings

Strengths: The Vikings have filled more than 99 percent of the Metrodome's seats during the last three years. And their 10-year share is a respectable 92.9 percent.

Drawbacks: The Vikings play in indoor comfort, have a flashy .625 win percentage for the decade and charge less for tickets than most teams. So why did they fall below 90 percent of capacity four years in the 1990s?

Bottom line: Vikings fans once had it too hard in frigid Metropolitan Stadium. They now have it too easy.

27. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Strengths: Attendance has picked up as the Bucs' fortunes have improved. Tampa Bay has finished in the NFL's top 15 each year since 1997.

Drawbacks: Attendance was lousy when the Bucs' fortunes were poor. Tampa Bay finished in the NFL's bottom 10 five times between 1991 and 1996. It has attained just 76.9 percent of capacity since 1991, worse than every team but Arizona.

Bottom line: Fan support in Tampa Bay has gyrated up and down. Only Tennessee has suffered worse fluctuations.

28. Oakland Raiders

Strengths: Oakland has been slow to embrace the second coming of the Raiders, but 2000 brought signs of life. Fans filled 92 percent of Network Associates Coliseum for a spunky, playoff-bound team.

Drawbacks: Per-game attendance has been just 50,738 since 1995, a figure that would disappoint every franchise but Arizona and Tennessee.

Bottom line: It doesn't help that rumors have the Raiders considering a return to Los Angeles. Perhaps team officials forget they ranked dead last in fan support there.

29. Atlanta Falcons

Strengths: The Falcons usually play badly (.444 for the decade) but occasionally do well at the box office—as in 1993, when they sold 90 percent of tickets.

Drawbacks: But don't forget 1996, when they dropped to a miserable 59 percent. The Falcons, all in all, have played to just 77.5 percent of capacity since 1991, worse than all but two teams.

Bottom line: Atlanta fans are notorious front-runners. They didn't turn out for the Braves when they lost, so why would they support the Falcons?

30. Arizona Cardinals

Strengths: The Cardinals have subjected Arizonans to lousy football, as witnessed by their 10-year win percentage of .350. But fans will respond to progress. They filled 87 percent of seats during an upswing in 1994.

Drawbacks: No team has done worse than Arizona's 48,492 fans per game or 66.2 percent of capacity since 1991.

Bottom line: The Rams prosper, the Cardinals suffer. Moving from St. Louis to Phoenix still looks like one of the worst franchise shifts in sports history.

31. Tennessee Titans

Strengths: The last two seasons have been sunny. A new stadium and playoff-caliber teams—what's not to like? The Titans were 14th in the NFL in attendance in 1999 and 11th in 2000.

Drawbacks: Consider the whole picture. The Titans have averaged just 50,006 per game since arriving in Tennessee; only Arizona is lower. And nobody has suffered wilder fluctuations in attendance.

Bottom line: Tennessee fans didn't respond when their team was mediocre and in temporary quarters. Their long-term commitment remains highly suspect.

Key

* Cleveland returned to the league in 1999. Its figures are for the seven seasons from 1991-95 and 1999-2000.

 Green Bay's figures have been adjusted to reflect that the Packers played five home games in Green Bay and three in Milwaukee each season from 1991 through 1994.

^ Baltimore began play in 1996. Its figures are for five seasons.

^^ Carolina, Jacksonville, Oakland and St. Louis began play in 1995. Their figures are for six seasons.

Seattle has been assigned a temperature of 72 degrees because the Seahawks played indoors until the 2000 season.

Tennessee began play in 1997. Its figures are for four seasons.

Glossary of categories

Score: Measure of each team's fan support on a 100-point scale. Support factors (average attendance, percent of capacity and attendance fluctuation) account for 60 percent of each team's overall score. Difficulty factors (winning percentage, seats per 100,000, ticket cost per $10,000 and December temperature) account for the other 40 percent. The top team is awarded a score of 100.00; all other scores are based off that benchmark. Teams less than 7 years old have their scores cut according to a sliding scale, reducing the statistical impact of the honeymoon period enjoyed by most new sports franchises.

Support rank: Rank among 31 teams in support factors. Teams with high average attendance, high percent of capacity and low attendance fluctuation receive the best ranks in this section.

Difficulty rank: Rank among 31 teams in difficulty factors. Teams with low winning percentage, high number of seats per 100,000, high ticket cost per $10,000 and low December temperature receive the best ranks in this section.

Average attendance: Average crowd at regular-season home games, 1991-2000.

Percent of capacity: Percentage of available seats that were occupied at home games, 1991-2000.

Attendance fluctuation: Difference (in percentage points) between best and worst annual percents of capacity, 1991-2000.

Win percentage: Team's regular-season record for the seasons 1991 through 2000.

Seats per 100,000: Number of stadium seats in 2000 for every 100,000 metro area residents. (Example: A team has 50,000 seats for a metro with 1 million residents. That equals 5,000 seats per 100,000 residents.)

Ticket cost per $10,000: Ratio of the 2000 average ticket price to every $10,000 of local per capita income. (Example: A team's average ticket price is $25, while the area's per capita income is $20,000. That equals a ticket cost of $12.50 per $10,000 of income.)

December temperature: Average high temperature for the month. Domed-stadium teams are assigned a temperature of 72 degrees.

FANTASY REPORT

CHANGE IS GOOD IN THE NFL—
IF YOU STAY ON TOP OF THINGS.

By Les Kovach

If you got up to go to the fridge during the 2000 NFL season, you probably didn't recognize the league when you sat back down on the couch. With all the change the NFL experienced, a fantasy team owner may be tempted to throw out everything he's learned and simply draft out of a hat. But, with parity the only thing dominating the NFL, it's more important than ever to pay attention.

Know the system

Often, a team's offensive system may be a better indicator of a player's fantasy potential than his past performance. Just ask Denver running backs Mike Anderson and Olandis Gary or Minnesota coach Dennis Green and quarterback Daunte Culpepper. Under Green in 1998 and 1999, Minnesota quarterbacks—including Brad Johnson, Randall Cunningham and Jeff George—averaged 36 touchdowns and more than 4,300 yards passing. Culpepper's 33 scoring strikes and nearly 4,000 yards passing in 16 games were par for the system.

DAUNTE CULPEPPER

Is Robert Smith's replacement on the Vikings, rookie running back Michael Bennett, a lock for 1,800 total yards this year? No, but Smith's past rushing and receiving numbers are a blueprint of how Green would like to use Bennett.

Of course, coaching changes mean new systems. With the arrival of new coach Dick Vermeil, former Rams receivers coach Al Saunders and quarterback Trent Green in Kansas City, expect the Chiefs to air it out, and expect the stats to reflect a high-powered passing attack. Conversely, even with cannon-armed George under center in Washington, new Redskins coach Marty Schottenheimer will stick to old habits (see: Christian Okoye) and grind it out on offense with Pro Bowler Stephen Davis.

Keep an eye on the camps

Inevitably, situations don't resolve themselves until late in training camp or the preseason.

With a load of 1,000-yard rushers in Denver, coach Mike Shanahan is going to trade Anderson or Gary. Whoever goes likely is an immediate starter and top 25 fantasy back; whoever stays fills in if Terrell Davis doesn't recover from leg injuries. Also, watch who grabs the vital tight end job after Byron Chamberlain's departure to Minnesota.

In San Francisco, where Charlie Garner left via free agency, the 49ers need a running back. Little known Paul Smith and Jonas Lewis were keeping the spot warm while Garrison Hearst continued to dream of a comeback.

MIKE ANDERSON

JEFF BLAKE

Someone—maybe rookie Kevan Barlow or a free agent or even fullback Fred Beasley—in the backfield will score plenty of TDs in San Francisco's offense. And keep an eye on Jerry Rice's situation; he'll be released and may land in Detroit or Seattle, among other possibilities.

Several other key starting jobs are up for grabs. The Chiefs signed free agent Priest Holmes to wrest the starting job from a committee of backs, including Frank Moreau and Mike Cloud. Quarterbacks Jeff Blake and Aaron Brooks will wage a heated battle in New Orleans, while Shane Matthews, Cade McNown and Jim Miller fight a less-heated battle in Chicago. Running back J.R. Redmond will attempt to emerge ahead of Kevin Faulk and Marc Edwards as the starter in New England. And there should be a good competition for the tailback spots in Arizona and Cleveland.

And, of course, if you pay close enough attention, you may uncover one of the many inevitable surprises to take the league by storm each fantasy season.

Quarterbacks

Player	Team
1 Peyton Manning	IND	Definition of consistency is already a virtual lock for 25-30 TDs and 4,000 yards passing.
2 Kurt Warner	STL	Despite injury, offense ranked No. 1 in points and yards. Look for similar results.
3 Daunte Culpepper	MIN	Loss of RB Robert Smith removes safety valve. Experience helps, but don't expect better stats.
4 Jeff Garcia	SF	Third in the league with 31 TDs and second with 4,278 yards. Who are Montana and Young, anyway?
5 Rich Gannon	OAK	Found a home in West Coast offense, averaging 26 touchdowns and 3,600 yards in two years.
6 Brian Griese	DEN	Led NFL with 102.9 passer rating and has all the weapons, but durability is a major concern.
7 Trent Green	KC	He was supposed to be Kurt Warner in St. Louis; now he gets his chance in Vermeil's offense.
8 Brett Favre	GB	Touchdowns and yards have fallen in each of last three seasons, but upside is still huge.
9 Brad Johnson	TB	Arrival immediately improves offense, but team won't change overnight. 25 TDs will be a stretch.
10 Rob Johnson	BUF	Should regain confidence—and teammates' support—without Flutie looking over his shoulder.
11 Jeff George	WAS	Under new coach Marty Schottenheimer, Washington will be a run-first team.
12 Donovan McNabb	PHI	Carried the Eagles' offense and made case for league MVP. Supporting cast much improved.
13 Elvis Grbac	BAL	Team wins with defense. Despite success throwing in K.C., numbers will be conservative.
14 Mark Brunell	JAX	Has new contract, but does he have coaches' support? Still has never thrown more than 20 TDs.
15 Drew Bledsoe	NE	Numbers steadily declined over last five years, but still averaged 3,700 yards and 22 scores.

Running Backs

Player	Team
1 Marshall Faulk	STL	The No. 1 fantasy pick and Rams MVP: 48 TDs and nearly 7,000 total yards in three seasons.
2 Edgerrin James	IND	Averaged 2,200 total yards and 17.5 TDs in first two seasons in league's most balanced attack.
3 Eddie George	TEN	Improved on career rushing averages with 1,509 yards, 14 TDs and league-leading 403 carries.
4 Stephen Davis	WAS	Offense's first option should get more carries. Safe bet for 1,200 yards and 10 touchdowns.
5 Fred Taylor	JAX	Showed what he is capable of when healthy. Breakaway ability may be unmatched.
6 Curtis Martin	NYJ	Most dependable fantasy back in the league will top 1,150 yards for a seventh straight year.
7 Jamal Lewis	BAL	Rare combination of size and speed; exploded in second half of season. Will score more.
8 James Stewart	DET	Expect new coach Marty Mornhinweg to rely on steady workhorse for 20-25 carries a game.
9 Lamar Smith	MIA	Don't expect repeat of career year, but 1,000 yards and 10 TDs isn't a reach in Miami offense.
10 Terrell Davis	DEN	Denver's tailback is a top five fantasy back—but will Davis be healthy enough to be the starter?
11 Corey Dillon	CIN	Carries, yards and TDs all improved in three seasons as starter: 1,300-yard, eight-TD potential.
12 Ricky Williams	NO	Will be pushed hard by rookie Deuce McCallister; how he will react is anyone's guess.
13 Emmitt Smith	DAL	Offense will rely on ageless star more than ever, and defenses know it—but can they stop him?

AFC EAST

By Larry Felser, Buffalo News

Indianapolis has a spongy defense and Miami has an erratic offense, but perfection is not in the game plan for AFC East 2001, so those two are likely to battle it out until the five-week span between November 11 and December 10 when they meet twice.

The Jets and Buffalo could make it interesting late in the season, but each has a new coach installing new systems—Herman Edwards with New York and Gregg Williams with Buffalo—so next year is the more realistic goal.

Indianapolis Colts

A year from now the Colts' first battle is likely to be with their salary cap, so a sense of urgency to win is upon them. A new weapon has been added to the power troika of quarterback Peyton Manning, running back Edgerrin James and wide receiver Marvin Harrison. That's Reggie Wayne, the electric rookie receiver from the Miami Hurricanes. Shootouts may be the key to Indy's success in the postseason.

Just as they were a year ago, the Colts pin most of their defensive hopes on Rob Morris, whose rookie year at middle linebacker was ruined by a series of false starts and injuries. It's a heavy load for an inexperienced player, but as Morris goes so goes the Colt defense, and maybe the entire team. If enemy runners can't be controlled more efficiently than they were a year ago, the Colts will have another unhappy ending.

Miami Dolphins

With the "un-quarterback," Jay Fiedler, the Dolphins were the surprise division champions, winning largely with their tough defense and the best Miami running game in many years. There is no guarantee running back Lamar Smith will have another career year, so Fiedler has been provided with better receivers—free agents James McKnight and Dedric Ward and rookie Chris Chambers.

Since the college draft didn't bring the help expected, the Dolphins will depend on the four free agents they added. The defense took a big free-agent hit with the loss of Trace Armstrong, the NFL's top sacker.

Coach Dave Wannstedt's remedy may be tighter, more-experienced coverage.

Buffalo Bills

Just about everyone in the Bills' organization is still introducing themselves to one another. New GM, new coach, new coaching staff and a flood of new players. It could be midseason and they'll still be bumping into the furniture like a company of unrehearsed actors. What may save them is the nucleus of a first-rate defense despite its loss of three starters.

If this team is to cause any trouble in the division, the offense will have to protect Rob Johnson. For that matter, Johnson must help himself by getting rid of his passes much more quickly in the newly installed West Coast offense. New front-office boss Tom Donahoe did Johnson a favor by re-signing superb wide receiver Eric Moulds.

New York Jets

The Bills Parcels era has exited and the Woody Johnson era is inching itself on stage. Johnson, the new owner, rolled the dice with Herman Edwards as his new coach, even though Edwards hasn't even been a coordinator. It would help if new GM Terry Bradway provided a good start with a sound draft.

What direction is finally taken depends upon whether Vinny Testaverde has enough left as a quarterback to push the Jets into early contention, or whether the season will be chalked up to a learning experience for young quarterback Chad Pennington. The tough September schedule should be revealing.

New England Patriots

It's not quite "Drew Bledsoe against the World," but it's close. The veteran quarterback is operating without a viable running game, with a makeshift offensive line and a team attitude in need of a radical adjustment. The Pats trailed at halftime six times last year and lost all six times. That doesn't say much for their heart. Few teams have as many holes as the Pats. The best they can hope for this season is the spoiler's role.

Santana Moss, WR

Less-filling Colts hope explosive offense is enough to overcome shaky defense.

The Colts are the "St. Louis Rams Lite." During the last two regular seasons they won more games than any team except the Tennessee Titans and as many as the Rams. Their offensive firepower isn't in the same category as that of the Rams, but it's close. Their defense wasn't as weak as the Rams' unit of 2000, but it was weak enough to keep them from winning a single playoff game in the Jim Mora era.

Last year Edgerrin James became the fifth player in NFL history to win consecutive rushing titles in his first two seasons.

In this season of flawed teams at the highest levels, the Colts may have a combination of just enough assets and few enough surmountable liabilities to make a long-shot pass at the Super Bowl. With a little defensive luck, however, they could turn out to be the class of the AFC East.

Peyton's place maturing?

The most important factor Indy may have going for it is increased maturity. Last season's 10-6 record might have been increased by two or three victories with more focus and steadier nerves. There wasn't much of a pattern to the losses. There were a couple of miserable starts, some shaky finishes and one uncharacteristic bad day by Peyton Manning when he was intercepted three times by the lowly Patriots.

The disturbing pattern was the inability of the defense to stop strong running games. As fine a runner as Edgerrin James has been for the Colts, the opposition outgained Indy and scored as many rushing TDs as James, 13. The entire run defense collapsed in the playoff game against Miami when it made Lamar Smith look like the ghost of Jim Brown. Indy was outscored 17-3 in the second half and then was trampled by Smith in overtime.

Mora brought New Orleans to its first experience with frequent victories, but was unable to win a playoff game. Now it's Indianapolis. Unless he finds a way to break the pattern, he'll be getting some skeptical looks from owner Jim Irsay and GM Bill Polian in January.

The major move Polian made a year ago to stop the bleeding against enemy runners was the drafting of middle linebacker Rob Morris in the first round. It didn't turn out well. By midseason Morris was on injured reserve, but he never broke into the starting lineup anyway and, in his seven appearances, made just 12 tackles. Since he came into the NFL at an advanced age, Morris, now 26, must produce immediately.

Uneventful offseason

The alarming thing is that nothing happened for Indy in the offseason to suggest the defense is going to be any better. The best of the draft brings gifted wide receiver Reggie Wayne and nothing that looks like immediate defensive help. Strapped by salary-cap restrictions, there was no venture into free agency.

The feel-good aspect of being a Colt fan is thinking about those 4,413 yards passing and Peyton Manning is coming off a monster year, having led the NFL with 4,413 passing yards and 33 TDs.

33 touchdowns accumulated by quarterback Manning; James' NFL-leading 1,709 rushing yards and Marvin Harrison's 102 catches and 14 touchdowns, both AFC-leading marks. Wayne had 43 catches and 10 TDs for the Miami Hurricanes, which implies even stronger offense. No division opponent came within 100 points of Indy's scoring output.

But even the presence of the Big Three—Manning, James and Harrison—is a reminder that if anything happened to any one of them the Colts would drop, and more than just a notch. For instance, Manning hasn't missed a start since he was a rookie. He hasn't even been out of a game for more than a handful of plays. If his streak ended, the offense would be in the hands of Billy Joe Hobert, a precipitous drop. There is no one behind James, and Wayne would have to be a freshman wonder to compensate for the loss of Harrison.

Keeping the points coming

The Colts need to score a lot of points in order to stay among the elite of the conference.

End Chad Bratzke (left) and middle linebacker Rob Morris (middle) were defensive disappointments in 2000, but tight end Marcus Pollard's stellar play earned a nice new contract.

There were only five games last season in which Indy failed to score at least 20 points. The alarming part was that all five of those games were against division opponents. It would not be surprising to see the Colts become more conservative offensively, in order to keep that question-mark defense off the field. Running left is the way, since tackle Tarik Glenn and guard Steve McKinney are on that side. Right tackle Adam Meadows is solid, but the club would like to do better than Jeff Saturday at center and Larry Moore at right guard. The two tight ends, Ken Dilger and Marcus Pollard, are a vital part of the running game, often lining up as a tandem. Pollard made 12 starts. Each had career-high receptions in 2000, 47 by Dilger and 30 by Pollard, who was rewarded with a rich contract.

Polian, normally a gifted drafter, did a lot of wheeling and dealing in the offseason, which amounted to little immediate impact this time. After Ware, the next two picks were not-ready-for-prime-time safeties, Idrees Bashir and Cory Bird, to compensate for the flight of veterans. Some of the younger Colt defenders will have to get better in a hurry.

Linebacking is especially vulnerable because of youth. Morris will be the middle man from the start. Marcus Washington, who didn't get a start as a rookie and made just 14 tackles, will replace departed

COLTS

Marvin Harrison's 14 TD receptions last season tied Raymond Berry's franchise record set in 1959.

Cornelius Bennett as the strongside backer. The young leader is Mike Peterson, who led the team with 160 tackles. He plays big in big games. He had 36 tackles in the three games against Miami.

Since the Colt secondary is disastrously slow, the pass rush must sizzle consistently. It produced a satisfactory 42 sacks last year. The right side of the line gets most of the burden, with Chad Bratzke at end and Ellis Johnson at tackle. Bratzke had just 7.5 sacks last year after contributing a dozen in each of his previous two seasons. Brad Sciolli won the starting left end job late in the season. Mark Thomas replaced him in passing situations and chipped in with five sacks, but he was wiped aside by the return of Shawn King from a year's drug suspension by the league. Left tackle Josh Williams will be challenged.

When the Colts chose not to re-sign free safety Jason Belser, it removed the defensive secondary's best blitzer. Bashir and Bird, along with Tony Blevins, get a crack at his job. Jeff Burris, the left corner, was slated for a switch to Belser's position if a speedy cornerback could be found. He wasn't. Burris led the team with four interceptions. Right corner will be a battle between Mustafah Muhammad and David Macklin.

Mike Vanderjagt is a deadly field goal kicker. He was successful on 25 of 27 attempts last season, although his first miss in seven post-season attempts, a 49-yarder, came in the overtime loss to Miami. Hunter Smith is a solid punter.

Can Fiedler and Smith conduct another symphonic offense to go with a strong Dolphin defense?

Never mind what Dave Wannstedt didn't do in his long, unhappy stay as the Chicago Bears' head coach. He appears to be the right fit in Miami. He also found something that eluded Don Shula in his final decade and Jimmy Johnson in his unsatisfactory hitch: a running game.

One of the wonders of the salary-cap/free-agency era is that Wannstedt found a way to win the championship of the competitive AFC East with Jay Fiedler (not to be confused with Dan Marino) as his starting quarterback. The coach will be hardpressed to pull a similar pigskin out of a helmet this year, but it's possible.

Will Lamar's luck run out?

The hang-up is the running game, specifically Lamar Smith's sterling part in it. Smith is 30 years old and he never had a season approaching his performance of 2000 in his previous six NFL seasons. And, oh yes, the week after he bled Indianapolis for 228 yards and dominated the overtime in Miami's come-from-behind playoff victory, the Raiders stuffed him on five yards in eight carries. Once Smith was stopped, the Dolphin offense was comatose. Once past Smith's 1,139 yards in his surprising regular season, the leading ball carrier was ... Fiedler!

That's why Wannstedt took a stab at acquiring Ricky Williams from New Orleans after the eccentric power back tried the patience of the Saints by toying with the idea of returning to baseball and stubbornly staying in San Diego to do offseason conditioning on his own. If Smith, injury-prone in the past, is unavailable for any significant portion of the season, the Dolphins are back to the days when they tried to make do with Marino's passing and role-player backs. The passing game is now the sideshow and the best role player may be rookie Travis Minor, who wasn't even a full-time starter at Florida State.

Lamar Smith came out of nowhere last season to rush for 1,139 yards and score 16 touchdowns.

Jay Fiedler provided consistency at QB last season, once going 92 straight attempts without an interception.

Wannstedt needs to get his ducks in a row by opening day since his September schedule consists of three playoff teams—Tennessee, Oakland and St. Louis—plus a dangerous home opener against arch rival Buffalo.

Offensive line gets Wise

There will be at least three changes in the offensive line. The most important may be the arrival of Tony Wise, Wannstedt's line coach with the Bears and, before that, his colleague on Johnson's staffs with the Cowboys and Miami Hurricanes. Guard Todd Perry, whom Wise admires, was signed as a free agent from the Bears, and Brent Smith moves up to start at left tackle. Tim Ruddy is the veteran center with Mark Dixon at left guard and Todd Wade, who had a strong rookie year, at right tackle.

Miami was active in free agency, as well as stung by it. Ray Lucas, who had some bright moments as a spot starter with the Jets, will back up Fiedler at quarterback. Marcus Spriggs, who started at right tackle for Buffalo in the last third of the season, providing depth on the line.

The most important signings may be at wide receiver. James McKnight led Dallas with 52 receptions and an average of 17.8 yards per catch. He and Dedric Ward, the ex-Jet, add something Miami hasn't had in a while: productive speed. The draft brought more speed in Wisconsin's Chris Chambers. Oronde Gadsden is a valuable possession receiver. Whoever plays tight end is basically a third tackle for the running game.

In 2000, this team won the division on the basis of its defense. Only Super Bowl champ Baltimore and Tennessee allowed fewer points than the Dolphins' 226. In nine games, all but one a Miami victory, the opposition was restricted to 14 or fewer points. Free agency may have changed that for the worse.

Taylor-made defense without a Trace

Lost from the Dolphin defense is Trace Armstrong, who led the AFC with 16.5 sacks, along with valuable sub Rich Owens, free safety Brock Marion and outside linebacker Robert Jones, a salary-cap casualty. Armstrong's strong pass rush helped free up Jason Taylor, who had 14.5 sacks and cost the team a fortune to retain. The Dolphins used their first draft pick on defense, but in a puzzling way. The selection was Wisconsin's small-but-talented corner Jamar Fletcher. Miami already had two superior corners, Sam Madison and Patrick Surtain, whose contract was extended at a high price the year before it expired.

Did Miami really need Fletcher to the exclusion of positions with greater priority? The Dolphins led the NFL in interceptions with 28, seven by nickel back Brian Walker. Jones' release leaves a hole at strongside linebacker. Weakside backer Derrick Rodgers was re-signed and Zach Thomas is still the defensive leader in the middle. The draft brings Syracuse's Morlon Greenwood, whose forte is speed and pursuit. If Marion isn't re-signed, Arturo Freeman gets the free safety job. Calvin Jackson is the experienced strong safety.

Even without Armstrong, the line is still the key to the defensive accomplishments. Running inside against Miami is mostly a fruitless task with monster tackles Tim Bowens and Daryl Gardener protecting Thomas, their tackling machine, when they aren't stuffing runners themselves. Kenny Mixon should replace Owens against the run, while Lorenzo Bromell can be a force as relief for Gardener or Bowens.

Since Olindo Mare's field goals are such a large part of the Miami offense, he was re-signed to a rich contract. He connected on 28 of 31 attempts. There will be an attempt to improve upon Matt Turk's punting. Ben Kelly, hindered by injuries in his rookie season, could save a spot on the roster since he's a quality cornerback and return man. ■

Flutie's flight, a new coach, a new defense and a new GM launch Bills into the great unknown.

The Bills finally solved their quarterback dilemma, but little else. Doug Flutie is gone and Rob Johnson is the undisputed No. 1.

The remaining questions include whether the new GM, Tom Donahoe, is as effective a team builder as the deposed one, John Butler; whether the new coach, Gregg Williams, can win as much as the fired one, Wade Phillips; and whether the new defensive system, the 4-3, installed by new defensive coordinator Jerry Gray is able to perform as explosively as the old one, the 3-4 under Ted Cottrell.

Williams is one of the bright, young coaches in the NFL, but Phillips never had a losing season in his three years at Buffalo's helm. He followed 11-5 and 10-6 seasons with last year's 8-8 mark, but his dismissal was the result of his indecision over Flutie and Johnson, as well as his refusal to carry out owner Ralph Wilson's command to fire the disastrous special teams coach, Ronnie Jones.

Wilson, 82, gave up his title as president for the first time when he hired Donahoe, the ex-Steelers director of football. Donahoe is more the CEO type, but when Butler replaced Bill Polian in 1992 he continued an era of winning football the length of which Buffalo had never seen before. Because of all that winning, Butler almost never got to draft until the selections reached the 20s. Nevertheless, he kept replacing departed stars with young stars. That's not easy.

Redrawing the line

For the previous two seasons the Bills were essentially a defensive team, but now they've lost two-thirds of their line, with glitzy young defensive end Marcellus Wiley having followed Butler to San Diego, and mammoth run-stopper Ted Washington released because of salary-cap pressures. Under Gray, the defense must find three new defensive starters and hope that Sam Cowart, second only to Baltimore's Ray Lewis as an inside linebacker, will find equal happiness on the outside.

Williams hired Mike Sheppard from coach Mike Holmgren's Seattle staff to install the West Coast offense. The new deep thinkers are convinced it will keep Johnson from suffering anything close to the 49 sacks inflicted upon him last season. Johnson has been a concussion-a-year man since the Bills traded with Jacksonville to get him. Part of his woes centered around the often inept play of the offensive line, but another part of it was Johnson's own tendency to hang on to the ball too long, trying to make the perfect play. Not unloading in the face of storming pass rushers may be courageous, but didn't someone once point out that "discretion is the better part of valor?"

Draft day dozen provides help

The Bills need so much help in so many places that Donahoe wheeled and dealt his way to a dozen draft choices. Presumably, most of them will make the team. One important rookie is running back Travis Henry of Tennessee. He gives Buffalo something it has been lacking, a feature back who is accustomed to carrying the ball 25 to 35 times a game. Buffalo has been functioning with running back by committee. Sammy Morris and Shawn Bryson are promising role players, but you can't run play-action passes with role players, and that's another thing the Bills need to protect Johnson.

The offensive line also has been refashioned. The solid part is the left with veteran tackle John Fina and Pro Bowl guard Ruben Brown. Williams made a quick decision to move Jerry Ostroski from center to right guard. Little-used Bill Conaty gets the first chance to start at center. Donahoe signed Kris Farris, once a promising rookie with Pittsburgh, to battle Robert Hicks for the right tackle job. Williams wants slimmer and more mobile linemen in the new offense.

Moulds' millions

The Bills spent a $12 million signing bonus to assure that their great receiver, Eric Moulds, would remain the centerpiece of the passing game. There have been many outstanding receivers in the history of the franchise, but none had 94 catches in a season as Moulds did in 2000 nor experienced back-to-back 1,300-yard seasons. Peerless Price or Jeremy McDaniel must step out as more useful accomplices for Moulds. Price is the starter but McDaniel was more explosive in the three-receiver sets. When tight end Jay Riemersma suffered a sprained knee and missed four games early in the season, the Bills lost three of them. It was a barometer of his worth to the attack.

The depleted defensive line retains only veteran left end Phil Hansen. Pat Williams, another monster run stuffer, will start at one tackle with Norwegian strongman Leif Larsen getting the first shot as his partner. Erik Flowers, last year's top pick, starts at right end after playing only occasionally last season. Rookie Aaron Schobel, a quick pass rusher from TCU, should see frequent duty.

The strength is the linebacking. Pro Bowler Cowart was leading the NFL in tackles until an ankle injury ended his season with a month to play. His move to the weakside will leave John Holecek, who had double-digit tackles in six of the last eight games, at middle linebacker. Keith Newman, who had a breakout year in his first as a starter last season, was second on the team with eight sacks.

It should be only a matter of time before the top rookie, Ohio State cornerback Nate Clements, trades his nickel back job to Ken Irvin for a starting spot opposite his old Buckeye teammate, Antoine Winfield. Winfield was breaking out as a pro sophomore until an injury kept him out of action for the last month. Keion Carpenter was playing well, too, and led the Bills with five interceptions, but also missed the final month. Ten-year veteran Henry Jones directs traffic from his strong safety position.

Aside from veteran Steve Christie's 26-for-35 field goal accuracy, the special teams proved to be a real train wreck: NFL-lowest in punt return average, kickoff returns, punt return yardage; AFC-low in punting average, drive starts and opponents' drive starts.

"We will be much better on special teams," Williams says. "I guarantee it."

The improvement began with the re-signing of Christie, who has won 13 games for Buffalo with field goals in the final minute of regulation or in overtime. The poor kickoffs last season were largely a matter of weird coaching strategy. Many of the rookies were drafted with an eye toward special teams play.

Offensive guard Ruben Brown earned his fifth straight trip to the Pro Bowl last season.

AFC EAST

Jets won't fly high for new coach Edwards, but expect Pennington to emerge from Testaverde's shadow.

The Jets' yearly outlook seems to change in a series of blurs. Personalities here and then gone, the Super Bowl just a step away and then—illusion. They make a full restart this time, from a new owner to the strong possibility of a new quarterback.

When Al Groh became the second Jets coach to resign in a year, and then Bill Parcells severed himself from the organization by resigning as director of football, the Parcells era itself seemed to have taken place an eon ago. This is a franchise without an identity now. Woody Johnson, the new owner, has no connection with any previous NFL team. Herman Edwards, the new coach, had no connection to Parcells, Groh or even Bill Belichick, the Jets' erstwhile coach-for-a-day in 2000. The new GM, Terry Bradway, made his bones with other NFL teams.

The Jets are now strangers in Gotham and even the most rabid of the team's fans has no realistic idea which direction will be taken. The only thing which seems sure is that whatever direction is taken, eventually Chad Pennington is the quarterback who will be charged with leading them.

One of the few identifiable traces Parcells left behind was the Jets' first round of last year's draft, when he had four picks. The early returns suggest that the "Big Tuna" may have hit it big on all four. The most obvious was defensive end Shaun Ellis, whose 8.5 sacks made his debut one of the most promising of any rookie pass rusher in Jets history. Anthony Becht started five of the last seven games at tight end, catching nine of his 16 passes during that period. Linebacker John Abraham played just the first six games before suffering a season-ending abdominal injury, but he was flying before he got hurt. He had 4.5 sacks and two forced fumbles in that short span.

Chad hanging loose

The least productive first-rounder—but the most intriguing—is Pennington. His only real action was in a garbage-time role when he threw for the Jets' only touchdown in a one-sided loss to the Raiders. What makes Defensive end Shaun Ellis exceeded everyone's expectations for his rookie season, finishing with 8.5 sacks.

Workhorse Curtis Martin rushed for more than 1,000 yards for the sixth straight season in 2000.

Pennington so exciting is, first, his skills, especially his intelligence and passing arm, and, secondly, Vinny Testaverde's age (38 in November) and the veteran quarterback's out-of-place status on a team looking to 2003, not 2001.

Chances are that Testaverde will begin the season as the starter and Edwards will watch how his team fares early in the season in a division that is still extremely competitive. If it appears the Jets can make a run for it, Vinny stays in command. But Testaverde's success with the Jets had a lot to do with Parcells' strong influence, and now he's gone. If the team falters early, it's likely the future will overtake the present and Pennington would assume command.

The identity of the quarterback may be less important than the question of Curtis Martin's staying power. Martin reached 1,000 yards for the sixth consecutive season, was voted the Jets' MVP and was named a Pro Bowl alternate. Yet, in the final 10 games his overall performance was masked by a career-high 209 yards rushing against Indianapolis' soft run defense. He had another 99-yard game against the Colts in that stretch. But in the other 10 games he averaged just 48 yards per game. Those numbers were a symptom of the Jets' slide out of playoff contention. To compete once again, Edwards and new offensive coordinator Paul Hackett must find a way to refresh Martin, who has more than 2,000 career carries, or find an alternative. That's why a second-round draft pick was used on running back LaMont Jordan of Maryland.

Moss grows on passing game

Bradway's first No. 1 pick, Miami smurf Santana Moss, could awaken the passing game. With Keyshawn Johnson gone, Jet backs caught 158 passes, which is out of whack. Hackett is installing the West Coast offense so that Moss and ex-Viking Matthew Hatchette might create some room for veteran receiver Wayne Chrebet to roam. Fullback Richie Anderson, whose 88 catches sent him in the Pro Bowl, isn't likely to be as busy this season but he's still valuable.

Ted's next adventure

The new defensive coordinator is Ted Cottrell, whose work with Buffalo's strong defense earned heavy praise. He'll use the 4-3 set that Edwards prefers. Ellis and Versatile Richie Anderson made the Pro Bowl after hauling in 88 catches from his fullback position last season.

Shane Burton are the ends, with the two Jasons, Wilz and Ferguson, at the tackles. Linebacker Mo Lewis is the defensive leader who comes up biggest in the big games. He had a personal-best 10 sacks last season, but he's about far more than rushing the passer. James Farrior plays the strongside, but he hasn't been the player the Jets expected him to be and could be challenged. Middle backer Marvin Jones is the man when New York needs to close down enemy rushing. Abraham is the top reserve. Dwayne Gordon was released.

Cornerback Aaron Glenn is solid and steady, but the big-play man in the secondary is the opposite corner, Marcus Coleman. He had three interceptions in New York's upset of the Dolphins, locked down dangerous Marcus Robinson in a victory over the Bears and, as an extra receiver, caught a 48-yard "Hail Mary" pass that broke open a tight game against Buffalo.

The most underrated defensive back is strong safety Victor Green, who led the team in interceptions and also finished second in tackles with 105. He also had four fumble recoveries. The free safety is Chris Hayes, who's also open to a challenge.

Moss brings a new dimension to the Jets' special teams. He returned four punts for touchdowns as a Miami senior. Laveranues Coles and Glenn are dangerous kickoff return men. With widely admired Mike Westhoff hired as the new special teams coach, placekicker John Hall's long kickoffs may be sacrificed for directional kicking. Hall, a free spirit who can irritate coaches, had a so-so season, missing half his field goal tries in the vital 40- to 49-yard range. Veteran Tom Tupa continues to be a good punter.

It's Drew against the world for Patriots in team's Foxboro swan song.

If you believe all those baseball-style, long-term contracts awarded by NFL teams lately, Drew Bledsoe will be the New England Patriots' quarterback until he's past the age of 40, to the tune of $103 million. Even if the relationship lasts half that long, the Pats did the smart thing by signing Bledsoe when he still had a year remaining on his existing contract. This team, which may be the neediest in the NFL, has little else.

Their new, privately financed $325 million stadium will be ready for the 2002 season, but if coach Bill Belichick can't get more out of the Pats than he did a year ago, they might as well be playing atop a parking garage in downtown Foxboro.

Blue light specials

The Pats signed a bunch of free agents from the NFL five-and-dime store, but the only one who figures to make an impact is Mike Compton, who was Detroit's starting center last season. His arrival may allow Damien Woody, who suffers from a lack of zeal, to be moved to guard. Most of the other free agents are long shots who played relatively little for their former teams. Larry Izzo deserves an asterisk in this category. The ex-Miami linebacker went to the Pro Bowl as the AFC's special teams ace. In fairness to the present administration, past contracts that overpaid inconsistent or underperforming Patriots are what put the stranglehold on the team's purse. Even Bledsoe's contract is far beyond his production.

Looking for Mr. Goodback

What New England desperately needs most, considering Bledsoe's lack of mobility and the shortage of skilled blockers, is a running game that might keep the enemy honest. Bledsoe was sacked 45 times in 2000. The Pats don't have a bona fide feature back. Kevin Faulk and J.R. Redmond are glorified third-down backs. Faulk, who offers the least in the toughest situations, was the leading ground gainer a year ago with a token 570 yards.

The needs don't stop with the backs. Compton, Woody and Adrian Klemm, who battled back from an injury-plagued rookie season, offer the best hope for a revival. Klemm, who ended up at left guard in 2000, may move to left tackle with Woody taking his position. Joe Panos, signed after two injury-plagued seasons in Buffalo, is the front-runner at right guard. Greg Robinson-Randall, also plagued by injuries as a rookie, is the right tackle. Two rookies, Matt Light and Kenyatta Jones, may figure prominently. The Pats are still attempting to replace tight end Ben Coates more than a year after he left. Rod Rutledge keeps proving he isn't the answer. With the line a sometime thing, efficient blocking by Rutledge (who could lose his job to second-year man Jermaine Wiggins) and fullback Tony Carter is essential, although free agent Marc Edwards could take Carter's job on the basis of his pass-receiving skills.

In case nothing works to keep Bledsoe in one piece, Damon Huard, rejected by Miami, was signed as his backup. Huard brings some mobility and an understanding of the offense, which has eluded Michael Bishop, now in his second year.

Troy Brown isn't very big, and he's been around for eight seasons, but he was the best the Patriots had in 2000, voted their MVP by his teammates. The veteran wide receiver had 83 catches and averaged 12.9 yards on 39 punts returns, both career highs.

Terry Glenn had another good year, 79 receptions and six touchdowns, yet he's never been the superstar receiver his talent suggested he would be. Also added were Bert Emanuel, whose best days were long ago in Atlanta, and David Patten, who caught 38 passes for a 13.4-yard average in Cleveland.

Only 29, Drew Bledsoe (top) became the Pats' all-time leading passer last year. Corner Ty Law has started 79 of 87 career games in New England.

Romeo woos defense

Romeo Crennell, the new defensive coordinator, will have at least three new starters. Richard Seymour, a big-play tackle the Pats drafted in the first round, will move into one of the slots vacated by Chad Eaton and Henry Thomas.

With Chris Slade released after a two-season slide, there will be a free-for-all at the strongside linebacker position. Mike Vrabel, who had his moments in Pittsburgh, is the most likely winner.

Belichick's coaching style, which Crennell knows well after serving two hitches with his new boss under Bill Parcells, is to feature the system (two-gap defense) over the talent, which means he likes to use role players in the line. Signed as a free agent was veteran end Anthony Pleasant. Holdover Greg Spires is a pass-rush specialist who comes off the edge with a lot of speed. The one constant should be end Willie McGinest, who had a subpar season but may benefit from playing next to Seymour. Last season Belichick received better play from left end Bobby Hamilton, one of his old Jets.

The linebacking is full of question marks. Middle man Ted Johnson, at his best one of the fiercest defenders in the NFL, is returning from another injury. Andy Katzenmoyer was also hurt last year, but he's never come close to resembling "the next Butkus" so many scouts predicted when he came out of Ohio State. Tedy Bruschi is a small overachiever on the weakside.

Last season the secondary, expected to be a strength, was a disappointment. Cornerback Ty Law signed a big contract, then went into cruise control, ending with an embarrassing suspension over a post-game frolic in Canada. Tebucky Jones continued to look like a first-round bust, even after being switched to free safety from corner. The other corner spot has a "vacancy" sign hanging on it. The lone bright spot was strong safety, where Lawyer Milloy led the team with 121 tackles, far more than any Patriot linebacker. Rookie Brock Williams or well-traveled free agent Terrance Shaw may eventually push right corner Otis Smith.

The star of the special teams is kicker Adam Vinatieri, who joined Hall-of-Famer Jan Stenerud and Jason Elam of the Broncos as the only players in NFL history to score 100 points in each of his first five seasons. His kicks accounted for two of New England's five victories. Lee Johnson, entering his 17th season, had a career-high 31 punts fall within the enemy 20-yard line, including four in a Patriot victory at Buffalo during adverse weather conditions late in December. Brown is one of the game's most dangerous punt returners and Faulk is an effective kick returner. ■

AFC CENTRAL

By Larry Felser, Buffalo News

Never in the annals of the NFL has a defense strangled opposing offenses as thoroughly as the Baltimore Ravens strangled Denver, Tennessee, Oakland and then the New York Giants last postseason. Never in the same annals has a Super Bowl champion dumped its No. 1 and No. 2 quarterbacks weeks after the celebration parade.

Baltimore Ravens

The fact is Baltimore now is a better team than the one that toyed with the Giants last January. The coming of Elvis Grbac to play quarterback and balance the offense is just one of several moves made to strengthen this powerhouse.

Tennessee Titans

It wasn't that long ago that the byword in the NFL was "the Titans go as Eddie George goes." George is still one of the elite power runners in the league, but Baltimore controlled him twice last season, the second time in the playoffs. That was the main reason the Titans failed to return to the Super Bowl. The same defense stands in Tennessee's path again if its attack remains one-dimensional.

The Titans did the proper things in the offseason to maintain their own tough defense. They lost defensive end Kenny Holmes to free agency but then traded the 29th pick of the draft for the Rams' Kevin Carter, who led the league in sacks two seasons ago.

Pittsburgh Steelers

A team must play strong defense if it is to have a say in the AFC Central and the Steelers proved they have it. After an 0-3 start last year, they allowed just 31 points in the next six games and won five of them.

Without a better passing offense, however, Pittsburgh will remain a streaky curiosity instead of a contender.

Jacksonville Jaguars

First the Jaguars were cursed by a plague of injuries and now they are depleted by the salary cap. Their visions of a Super Bowl may have passed. They still have some glamorous weapons, but it's what is missing in the offensive line and the defense that may bog them down against strong opposition.

Cleveland Browns

Conventional wisdom used to be that coaches of expansion teams were given plenty of time to develop their collections of kids and complete strangers. No longer. Chris Palmer was fired after two years and now Butch Davis returns to the NFL from college football to try his luck.

The best news for Browns fans is that a decent defensive line appears to be taking shape. Last year's No. 1 pick, end Courtney Brown, is joined by this year's No. 1, tackle Gerard Warren, as well as free agent Mark Smith of Arizona. Free-agent linebackers Dwayne Rudd of Minnesota and Brant Boyer of Jacksonville should help.

Cincinnati Bengals

You have to hand it to the Bengals this time. They tried. A parade of potential free agents paraded through Cincinnati, said some nice things about the organization and the city—and then signed elsewhere.

Akili Smith's status as the once and future quarterback was muddled when the front office signed Jon Kitna to a $10 million contract. The superb running back, Corey Dillon, reluctantly wears the transition-player tag, which is becoming an old story at Cincy.

TOP PLAYERS
OFFENSE: Corey Dillon, RB Cincinnati Bengals
DEFENSE: Ray Lewis, LB Baltimore Ravens
NEWCOMER: Elvis Grbac, QB Baltimore Ravens

With all-world defense and a velvet touch from Elvis, the Ravens can't help but get even better.

The Ravens shut out four opponents last season. They allowed no more than one touchdown in 11 games. Their yield for the season was 165 points. In the playoff victory over Tennessee, two of their three touchdowns came on a 90-yard return of a blocked field goal and a 50-yard interception return by Ray Lewis, their great middle linebacker.

In four postseason games they allowed one offensive touchdown.

Mad scientist adds elements

Memorable. Historic. But nothing you can count on to happen in two consecutive seasons. So Brian Billick, at heart an offensive coach, made the big moves as soon as the cheering stopped. He dumped Trent Dilfer, the winning quarterback in the Super Bowl. He dumped Tony Banks, his one-time starter and later Dilfer's backup. Then he signed Elvis Grbac from Kansas City as a free agent.

Grbac is the sort of quarterback associated with Billick when he was offensive coordinator for the high-scoring Minnesota Vikings. With the Chiefs last season, Grbac threw for 1,089 yards more than Dilfer and Banks combined; eight more touchdown passes; five fewer interceptions.

The Ravens also added their No. 1 draft choice, tight end Todd Heap, with whom Billick, the mad scientist, can combine Shannon Sharpe and tinker with all sorts of double-tight end sets. Welcomed back is one of last year's first-rounders, wide receiver Travis Taylor, whose rookie season was halted early by injury.

The Ravens were a handful in 2000. In 2001, they look like a wheelbarrow full.

Heaven's Front Seven

Free agency cost them a couple of helpful defenders, but their overwhelming strength is in the starting front seven, and that bunch stays intact. The team went to the financial wall to return outside linebacker Jamie Sharper, a superb player hidden in the shadow of Lewis, the all-universe middle man.

Surprisingly, the Ravens don't have a massive sack record. They dropped opposing quarterbacks just 35 times last year. Marvin Lewis, the defensive coordinator, plays a more disciplined brand of defense and his first priority is stopping the run. The Ravens stop it dead in its tracks. They allowed 59 first downs rushing, 39 under the NFL average. The average rushing gain against Baltimore was 2.7 yards, about a yard and a half under the league average. Keep adding 2.7 yards and they don't translate to first downs. Just five rushing touchdowns were allowed.

As good as the linebacking unit is, all three have football personalities of their own. Lewis is an updated version of Hall-of-Famer Dick Butkus, with a lot more speed. Peter Boulware is the attacker, especially against the pass. He had seven sacks. Sharper is the more cerebral type but still a hard hitter. They have one thing in common: great speed.

Tony Siragusa and, to a lesser extent, Sam Adams, the 300-plus pounders in the middle of the line, made their reputations in the postseason as the roadblocks to the run as well as protectors of the middle. They allow Lewis to roam all over making plays. Veteran left end Rob Burnett led the team in sacks with 10.5. Michael McCrary had 6.5 sacks but is capable of much more.

The strength in the defensive backfield is at the cornerbacks. Duane Starks and Chris McAlister are able to lock down just about any receiver. Starks had six interceptions to lead the team. The outlook at safety is not as rosy. Rod Woodson, entering his 15th season at age 36, is the free safety. Rookie Gary Baxter may replace the departed Kim Herring at strong safety.

New Ravens quarterback Elvis Grbac (bottom), whose favorite target in Kansas City was All-Pro tight end Tony Gonzalez, will not see much of a drop-off at the position in Baltimore throwing to Shannon Sharpe.

There is another incentive for the defense. Coordinator Lewis just missed getting a head-coaching job last season. Anything near a repeat performance could clinch one for him next January.

Qadry Ismail had the most receptions among Raven wide receivers, 49, but Billick is looking for more than that with Grbac and Taylor aboard. Sharpe led the team with 67 catches, but throwing to the tight end would be nothing new for Grbac. His main man in Kansas City was All-Pro Tony Gonzalez.

Backup receiver Jermaine Lewis (left) was the AFC's top punt returner last season, while rookie running back Jamal Lewis got better as the season progressed, with two 100-yard performances in postseason.

Searcy signs on up front

Jamal Lewis was a dependable "pounder" as the rookie feature back, gaining 1,364 yards. He lifted his play in the postseason, gaining more than 100 yards in two of the four games. The worry is the lack of depth behind him. He should be helped by the signing of Leon Searcy, who moves in at right tackle opposite one of the premier left tackles in football, Jonathon Ogden. The inside is a little spongy. Edwin Mulitalo is the left guard, Kipp Vickers the right guard and Mike Flynn is at center replacing departed Jeff Mitchell. If rookie center Casey Rabach can start, Quinn will keep his right guard job.

Jermaine Lewis led the AFC in punt returns with a 16.1-yard average and returned two for touchdowns. He had an 84-yard kickoff return for a Super Bowl touchdown. The kicking game is first-rate. Matt Stover connected on 35 of 39 field goal attempts, while Kyle Richardson had 35 punts downed inside the enemy 20.

AFC CENTRAL

McNair must step up his game if Titans are to make a serious run at Baltimore.

It was not a relaxing offseason for the Titans. Quarterback Steve McNair, from whom they desperately need a breakout year, had an infection in his throwing shoulder for months. If coach Jeff Fisher isn't nervous, he should be. McNair needs to improve, quickly, if the Titans hope to overcome Baltimore, the only team that found the key to beating Tennessee in Nashville's Adelphia Coliseum.

This is McNair's seventh NFL season, his fifth as the Titans' full-time quarterback. For all his natural skills, his advance has been glacial. When the Ravens kept Eddie George under control in their playoff battle last season, something extra was needed from McNair and he didn't have it. In five postseason appearances, he has thrown only one touchdown pass. His statistics in 2000 weren't much different from his numbers in previous seasons. In fact, his 13 interceptions were his most since his first year as a starter.

McNair Force

The front office didn't provide McNair with much in the way of reinforcements. Free-agent money spent on the likes of flops like Carl Pickens and Yancey Thigpen has resulted in salary-cap strictures. Kevin Dyson and Derrick Mason are the only wide receivers of any (good) reputation. Dyson suffered a serious knee injury early last season and his recovery was so gradual that the plan is to use him sparingly for the first month or so. Mason, one of the league's top return men, had his own breakthrough with 63 catches last year. Behind them, only Chris Sanders, who has up years and down years, offers much help.

The passing attack seems destined to be more of a hunt-and-peck operation than it was last year. Using a double-tight end formation and attempting to ram George down the throat of the opposition may be the only alternative. Tight end Frank Wycheck, McNair's most frequent target, led the team with 70 catches. Look for Erron Kinney, the second tight end, to take the field often.

George carried the ball more (403 times) and gained more yardage (1,509 rushing yards) than in any of his five pro seasons. Once thought indestructible, that rep took a little ding when he underwent serious toe surgery in the offseason. He could use a little help, but Dan Alexander, a sixth-round pick from Nebraska, was the only running back taken in the draft. He could end up as the starting fullback when the Titans use one.

The tackles are the key to George's success in the running game. Brad Hopkins has joined the elite among NFL left tackles. Fred Miller should have smoother sailing in his second year as the right tackle after coming over from the Rams. The only question about 18-year veteran and future Hall-of-Famer Bruce Matthews is whether he plays left guard or center. If it's guard, Kevin Long stays at center. If it's center, Zach Piller moves up at left guard.

Pass rush adds Carter

The major change on defense is caused by the free-agent defection of right end Kenny Holmes. The Titans then traded with St. Louis for Kevin Carter, once on track to become a longtime pass-rushing star. Snarled in a nasty contract dispute, Carter became part of the problem last season in St. Louis as the Rams' defense went belly-up. Fisher hopes Carter can regain his once-formidable skills. To accommodate him at left end, Jevon Kearse will switch to right end. That means Kearse, whose sophomore season was nothing like his glitzy rookie debut, must deal with perennial All-Pro tackles Jonathan Ogden of Baltimore and Tony Boselli of Jacksonville each twice a season. The incumbent tackles are John Thornton and Jason Fisk, with a surprise addition: Josh Evans, suspended all of last season by the league for violating its substance-abuse policy. Evans was a dominant force in the postseason games of '99.

Many scouts believe with talents like quarterback Steve McNair (left) and Pro Bowl running back Eddie George, the Titans should be able produce more than their No. 14 rank in total offense would indicate.

corner Samari Rolle, who has evolved into one of the finest defensive players in the league. Blaine Bishop is still a force at strong safety. Bobby Myers replaces Robertson, and rookie Andre Dyson has the best chance of filling Walker's vacancy at left corner. The line-backing is consistently good with Randall Godfrey in the middle, flanked by Eddie Robinson and Greg Favors.

Williams shuffles off to Buffalo

There is major defensive change off the field, with Gregg Williams, Fisher's highly regarded coordinator, leaving to become head coach at Buffalo. He took secondary coach Jerry Gray with him to become the Bills' defensive coordinator. Jim Schwartz is the Titans' new coordinator. Fisher hired ex-Kansas City head coach Gunther Cunningham as an assistant to provide an experienced sounding board for Schwartz.

There will be change on special teams, too. The Titans bid adieu to kicker Al Del Greco and signed the Panthers' Joe Nedney to replace him. With Mason now a starting receiver, some of his return duties may go to someone else. Craig Hentrich dropped 33 punts inside the enemy 20-yard line.

Steelers need to upgrade Kordell, passing game to move into contention.

The Steelers are just good enough to miss the playoffs. They have a defense that ranks in the top quarter of the NFL, a running game that's occasionally dominant, but a passing offense that holds down the rest of the team like an anchor.

Running the ball successfully and playing defense can translate into success in certain divisions, but not in the AFC Central. In order to move up in the pecking order, the Steelers must hurdle Baltimore and Tennessee. It can't be done with a one-dimensional offense. The Ravens annihilate the run and the Titans are almost as efficient.

'Bus' fare increases

It all means that Pittsburgh's hopes rest mainly with quarterback Kordell Stewart and, to a lesser extent, running back Jerome Bettis. Bettis had the sort of season that earned him the nickname "The Bus," with 1,341 yards on 355 carries. Out of that came a new contract. Unless Bettis, who enters his ninth pro season, loses some of his zeal now that his future is secure, he will remain the team's foremost weapon. Stewart is another story.

A year ago, journeyman Kent Graham was brought in as the Steelers' shadow quarterback because there was such a crisis in confidence about Stewart's development and stability. Graham actually did win the starting job, then played himself out of it. Since he was the only remaining option, Stewart was shoved back into the huddle and played satisfactorily. It was significant that when the Steelers won three of their last four games, two of them, against Oakland and Washington, were at home. The late, unlamented Three Rivers Stadium had become a "House of Hostility" to Kordell, which was part of his problem.

The Trouble with Plaxico and Troy

If Stewart is going to advance further, something must be done to cause an attitude adjustment in his two principal receivers, Plaxico Burress and Troy Edwards. They were Pittsburgh's first-round draft choices last year and in 1999, respectively. The plan was to develop them as Stewart's collaborators in a vertical passing game. Neither has developed nor contributed much yet.

Consequently, coach Bill Cowher promoted Mike Mularkey to offensive coordinator, hired Kenny Jackson from Penn State as receivers coach and Tom Clements as the team's first quarterback coach since 1973, Terry Bradshaw's formative period. Jackson tackled the wide receiver problem head-on, identifying Burress as a player who always got along on his great natural ability but was stymied as an NFL rookie matched against players with his own level of skills. He also described Edwards' difficulty in adjusting to an offense not built around him, as it was in college at Louisiana Tech.

Why Stewart didn't have a quarterback coach years ago is a mystery. It was clear from the start that he needed someone to hold his hand, especially as his position shifted from "Slash" to "quarterback" and back again. The new coaches should have time to smooth out the bumps in their charges. The Steelers don't play a team with a winning record until the eighth game of the season, when they visit Tampa Bay. They don't start running the Baltimore-Tennessee gauntlet until October 29 when they entertain the Titans.

If Edwards and Burress don't develop, journeymen Hines Ward and Courtney Hawkins will keep their jobs. If Stewart doesn't continue to mature, the Steelers are sunk.

The big change in the offensive line is the departure of Dermontti Dawson, the team's great center, and the coming of Jeff Hartings. Hartings, signed from Detroit, where he was one of the NFL's better guards, has been switched to center with the expectation that he will be the linear successor to not only Dawson but Hall-of-Famer Mike Webster, the only Steelers to hold the position since 1974. There's strength at the tackles with Wayne Gandy on the left side and young Marvel Smith on the right. The guards are Rich Tylski and Alan Faneca. Both tight end Mark Bruener and fullback Dan Kreider are integral parts of the running game because of their blocking.

The Steelers do a decent job against the run, but in order to stop Eddie George of Tennessee, Jamal Lewis of Baltimore, Corey Dillon of Cincinnati and Fred Taylor of Jacksonville, more than "decent" is needed. That's why defensive tackle Casey Hampton, the squatty Texas star, was drafted in the first round. He has a reputation for jamming the middle of the line of scrimmage. Second-year man Chris Combs should force a change from Aaron Smith at left end. Chris Sullivan or converted nose tackle Kimo von Oelhoffen will play the right side.

Levon likes his money, leaves

The salary cap could no longer accommodate Levon Kirkland, and that causes a huge vacancy at inside linebacker and in the dressing room, where the big guy was a leader. Mike Jones, best known as the Ram who made the Super Bowl-saving tackle for St. Louis two seasons ago, is his successor. Earl Holmes will play alongside him. The pass rush, still relying on zone blitzes, comes heavily from the outside linebackers, Jason Gildon and Joey Porter, who accounted for 24 of the Steelers' 39 sacks.

Big seasons are needed from starting corners Dewayne Washington and Chad Scott, as well as their top two backups (Jason Simmons and Deshea Townsend), since all four are slated to become free agents after this season. Washington and Scott each had five interceptions. Lee Flowers is the veteran strong safety, while Brent Alexander and Scott Shields fight it out for the free safety start.

Kris Brown loses some effectiveness when he attempts field goals longer than 40 yards. Josh Miller led the NFL with 34 punts downed inside the 20. Hank Poteat finished among the league's top 10 punt returners, but more yardage is needed on the kickoff returns. ■

Salary-cap blues have Super Bowl dreams fading, but the Jaguars' big names remain.

The Jaguars still have some of the names that made them such a dangerous team when the NFL moved into the new millennium—Mark Brunell, Tony Boselli, Jimmy Smith, Fred Taylor, Tony Brackens. The problem is that they don't have enough of them any longer. Attrition and the salary cap changed the football landscape in Jacksonville.

Not that the Jaguars are a bad team. Despite the flood of injuries that may have ruined their last-ditch push for the Super Bowl, the Jags still split with Tennessee and Pittsburgh and their two losses to Super Bowl champion Baltimore were by a total of eight points. They just keep losing players, mostly because of cap constraints.

Bruised, battered Brunell

Brunell, who was re-signed to a $30 million deal, and Taylor remain the heart of the offense. Part of the shift in strategy to keep the quarterback in one piece was to work Taylor as hard as possible. Consequently, the sacks surrendered by the jerry-built offensive line were cut in half over the last half of the season. They needed to be reduced. As it turned out, the 54 sacks Brunell suffered were a personal high he could have done without.

Yet, despite the shoddy protection, the lefty tied his team record with 20 touchdown passes, compiled his largest yardage total in four seasons (3,640) and threw the ball 512 times, the most in five years. He remains the Jaguars' unquestioned offensive leader. Taylor's consistent excellence gives Jacksonville the best one-two punch in the league's most competitive division.

Healthy return of Smith key

If Smith does not feel the lingering effects of April abdominal surgery to repair scar tissue (which dates back to his Dallas days), Brunell will have as his principal target a man who averaged 90 catches over the last five seasons, including 91 last year. Keenan McCardell, his partner, caught 93 and each exceeded 1,200 yards. If Smith isn't ready, the Jaguars will cross their fingers over R. Jay Soward, whose lack of discipline and casual attitude resulted in much second-guessing about making him last year's top draftee. Tight end Kyle Brady, who caught 64 passes, now has a better rapport with Brunell.

The Achilles' heel is the offensive line. Everything is fine with the left side, where Four-time Pro Bowl receiver Jimmy Smith has 207 receptions over the last two seasons.

Boselli is the NFL's best tackle and Brad Meester, who excelled as a rookie, made the switch from college center. The Jaguars need John Wade to make a major comeback at center after missing 14 games with a stress fracture in his foot. Problems on the right side might be solved if rookie Maurice Williams comes through at right tackle, allowing Zach Wiegert to move back to right guard, where he fits more comfortably.

Moeller wants more bite on 'D'

Gary Moeller, who spent most of last year as Detroit's head coach, is the new defensive coordinator. He made it clear that there will be less reliance on the zone-blitzing schemes utilized by his predecessor, Dom Capers, who left to take the head-coaching job with the expansion Houston Texans. His first task will be to unscramble the linebacking, where Hardy Nickerson and Lonnie Marts appear to have outlived their usefulness, and Kevin Hardy, a star not long ago, feuded with head coach Tom Coughlin to the point where it's only a matter of time before he goes. Second-year man T.J. Slaughter

Despite being sacked 54 times, athletic QB Mark Brunell still managed to throw 20 touchdown passes and rank sixth in the AFC in passer rating (84.0).

The big change in the line involves top draftee Marcus Stroud, who should be able to plug a large portion of the middle. Right end Brackens, who always seems on the cusp of stardom, led the team with 7.5 sacks. Gary Walker, another run-plugger, is stationed at left tackle in Moeller's design to

The Jaguars may have to risk playing Carnell Lake at free safety, despite his 34 years and the fact that he spent last season on injured reserve. They need a traffic cop back there, considering only 12 passes were intercepted in 2000. Donovin Darius' play dipped at strong safety. Rookie James Boyd will play a lot. Fernando Bryant and Aaron Beasley are competent corners.

With punter Bryan Barker having defected, rookie David Leaverton should get his job. Kicker Mike Hollis missed only two of 24 field goal attempts. With Reggie Barlow gone, Soward has to kick it into gear as a return man.

Now that the 'old Browns' have a Super Bowl title, Cleveland fans and management are beginning to expect much bigger things.

There is franchise envy in Cleveland. Jubilation over a new team, replacing the "old Browns" who were shanghaied to Baltimore by Art Modell, plus a beautiful new stadium, were enough to carry the city's rabid football fans for two seasons. But now the expatriate Browns are the Super Bowl champion Ravens and Cleveland wants more.

The "old Browns" may have played in a dirty, creaky old stadium, where sitting in some areas was like watching a game through venetian blinds, but at least the football was first-rate and in most years of championship quality.

Last season the new guys scored the fewest points in the NFL while the defense finished last in the conference.

Back to basics with Butch

That's why Chris Palmer was fired after just two years as head coach, and Butch Davis, who restored winning football at the University of Miami without getting the school put on probation, is now in charge. Davis isn't new to the NFL. He was a Jimmy Johnson aide in Dallas. Defense is his game and he'll be starting over from the bottom.

Owner Al Lerner became impatient with everyone in the organization, including club President Carmen Policy and Dwight Clark, the vice president of football operations. It cost Lerner more than $3 million to buy out Palmer. Davis' contract calls for $15 million over five years. That's a lot of impatience.

Rudd, Warren aid 'D' reconstruction

For the second draft in a row the Browns picked a defensive lineman, Gerard Warren of Florida, as their top man. The 325-pound strongman will line up next to Courtney Brown, the top pick of the entire draft a year ago. The selection of tackle Warren was designed to discourage the double-team blocking that hindered Brown's debut, as well as to clog enemy running inside. The Cleveland defense gave up an AFC-worst 156.6 rushing yards per game. Brown will be moved to right end, with Orpheus Roye switched from tackle to left end. Stalin Colinet will play left tackle and Keith McKenzie, who led the Browns with eight of their 42 sacks, will be the swing end. Colinet may end up playing more end than tackle.

The line is the first part of the defensive reconstruction. The linebacking was improved by the free-agent signing of Dwayne Rudd from Minnesota. The other outside linebacker, Jamir Miller, and middle man Wali Rainer should benefit from the reupholstered line. The arrival of the versatile and athletic Rudd allows Davis to move Miller around in a number of attacking positions.

The risks taken defensively last season were illustrated by the four sacks recorded by cornerback Daylon McCutcheon. The occasional cornerback sack is one thing, but doing it enough to result in four sacks is trouble. Corey Fuller, the other corner, accounted for three of the Browns' meager 12 interceptions. Percy Ellsworth returns at free safety and Marquis Smith is the strong safety. This part of the lineup could experience many changes throughout the season.

Bruce Arians, the new offensive coordinator, will install the West Coast offense, with the emphasis on short passing. The Browns have neither the line nor the receivers for much more than short passing.

Third-year quarterback Tim Couch completed 63.7 percent of his passes last year, but neither of his top two receivers, Kevin Johnson (below) nor Dennis Northcutt, caught a touchdown pass.

Davis' biggest handicap in making any sort of major improvement is the absence of a feature running back of first rank. The Browns have tried just about everything without success. The latest was to sign Curtis Enis of the Bears, a stellar prospect when he came out of Penn State. He didn't last the first mini-camp, retiring because of knee problems. Neither Erriett Rhett nor Travis Prentice was the answer, so the expectation is that Davis will give one of his own Miami Hurricanes, third-round rookie James Jackson, a chance to be No. 1.

Couch potatoes in receiving corps

The passing attack bogged down as soon as young quarterback Tim Couch was injured. Davis would like to protect him with a running game, but it won't be easy. Neither starting wide receiver, Kevin Johnson nor Dennis Northcutt, caught a touchdown pass last season. Rookie Quincy Morgan, big and fast, needs a lot of coaching, but his talent could make him valuable late in the season.

Arians, who was quarterbacks coach at Indianapolis, is an advocate of two-tight end alignments, which is one reason Rickey Dudley of the Raiders was signed as a free agent. Dudley still has enormous potential, but it's rare that Al Davis gives up on a player of his physical skills. If Butch Davis can get more out of him, the ex-Ohio State basketball player may be the best thing to happen to Couch. Also signed was ex-Falcon A.J. Odofin. Aaron Shea, who started at tight end last season as a rookie, may be out of the picture.

New coach Butch Davis (left) wants badly to establish a running game to take the heat off young quarterback Tim Couch. Second-year rusher Travis Prentice, who led the Browns with 512 yards last year, is the best returning backfield alternative.

The major improvement on the offensive line was the signing of former Packer tough guy Ross Verba to play right tackle. The return of left guard Jim Pyne from the injured list was also upbeat news. Center Dave Wohlabaugh is the most effective of the incumbent line starters. Roman Oben is the holdover left tackle. Everett Lindsay will be challenged at left guard.

The kicking game is adequate, with Chris Gardocki at punter and Phil Dawson the placekicker. Northcutt's 10.7-yard average landed him among the NFL's top 10 punt returners. The coaches like second-year man Jamel White, not only as a kick returner but a spot running back. ■

Scoring points on the road is the first step to getting the Bengals back on the road to respectability.

They say that in the NFL, what reveals the character of a team is its ability to win on the road, on foreign fields amid a hostile environment. Check out these numbers: 0-0-0-12-6-13-3-7. Those are the game-by-game points scored by Cincinnati on its way to a 1-7 road record last season. The lone victory came against expansion Cleveland. How about those Bengals?

K-I-T-N-A does not spell relief

This franchise is inscrutable in its effort to heal what ails it. The Bengals' only major free-agent signing was Seattle quarterback Jon Kitna, whom Mike Holmgren decided he could easily do without. Kitna had an interception ratio of 4.5, a figure higher than only Trent Dilfer and Ryan Leaf, both canned by their teams after the season. Kitna also led the league in fumbles with 17, including four in his final game as a Seahawk.

His closest competitor in that category was Akili Smith, Cincinnati's incumbent starter who fumbled 14 times. The proper way to accept snaps from center should be the first item of business in the Bengal training camp.

There is a difference between the two. Smith was in his first season as the starter. Cincinnati made him the third pick in the entire draft two years ago. Darnay Scott, the team's leading receiver with more than 1,000 yards in '99, missed all of last season after breaking his leg. He is expected to be ready to participate in training camp.

So Smith broke in without the man who should have been his No. 1 collaborator. Instead, his main target became talented but unpolished rookie Peter Warrick, putting Smith at a major disadvantage. Not only was Kitna signed for $10 million, but the front office, not famous for its largesse, spent $800,000 to re-sign journeyman quarterback Scott Mitchell. Apparently this is the definition of "patience" with a kid quarterback in Cincinnati.

There may be a couple of reasons for the downgrade of Smith. The first was his arrest for a DUI in January, an infraction that does not go down well in conservative Cincinnati.

Jon Kitna arrives from Seattle to battle Akili Smith for the starting quarterback position after posting less-than-impressive numbers with the Seahawks.

Third-year quarterback Akili Smith opened last season as the Bengals' starting QB, but finished the year sitting on the bench behind veteran Scott Mitchell.

The second was the hiring of Bob Bratkowski, who once worked with Kitna in Seattle, as the new offensive coordinator.

Offense too dependent on Dillon

With Scott out of action and both the quarterback and top receiver so inexperienced, the passing game finished dead last in the league while the running attack was used for three-quarters of the offensive production. In effect, Corey Dillon, with his 1,435 rushing yards, was the Cincinnati offense. Dillon tried to escape via free agency, but the franchise tag was attached to him.

Whether it's Kitna, Smith or even Mitchell at quarterback, the running game is likely to be supreme again as long as Dillon stays around. To help Dillon, the Bengals signed longtime Miami left tackle Richmond Webb, allowing Willie Anderson to stay at his familiar right tackle position. Matt O'Dwyer, the left guard, broke his ankle in November but recovered and was re-signed. The young right guard, Mike Goff, is a comer. Brock Gutierrez, who's had indifferent results when he's had to start in the past, will probably take over at center.

CRAIG YEAST
24 RECEPTIONS 301 YARDS

The Bengals finished last season with No. 1 pick Peter Warrick (left) and waiver acquisition Danny Farmer manning the starting receiver slots. With 51 catches, Warrick was the first rookie to lead the team in catches since 1973, while Farmer posted Cincinnati's only 100-yard receiving day vs. Jacksonville.

It would be sound business to make sure Warrick gets the ball a lot more. In the last half of the season he began finding the end zone, not only as a receiver but as a runner, with a reverse and a punt return. He's a special player and may be able to do for the Bengals what he used to do for Florida State. The draft brings Chad Johnson, a second-round choice out of Oregon State who has all the size and speed necessary to become a big-time NFL receiver. Since he's the cousin of Keyshawn Johnson and Samari Rolle, Tennessee's superb cornerback, he has good NFL bloodlines. Bratkowski has to get more out of his tight ends. Tony McGee had just 26 catches last year.

Mizzou's Smith impacts line

The big change on defense is the addition of the Bengals' No. 1 draft pick, Missouri pass rusher Justin Smith, who has the right stuff to line up immediately at right end. The front office signed Tony Williams of the Vikings to line up at tackle next to Smith. Kevin Henry was signed from the

PROJECTED STARTERS

Despite his gripes about playing in Cincinnati, Corey Dillon earned his second straight trip to the Pro Bowl, smashing the Bengals' single-season rushing record with 1,435 yards.

Steelers to battle Vaughn Booker at left end. Left tackle Oliver Gibson was the only lineman to start all 16 games at the same position for Cincy.

Former Maryland head coach Mark Duffner, the new defensive coordinator, plans to use linebacker Steve Foley in a variety of ways to capitalize upon his pass-rush ability. Outside backer Takeo Spikes was the defensive leader and leading tackler a year ago. He had to do it without Brian Simmons, the fine middle linebacker who suffered a season-ending knee injury in the opening game.

The cornerbacks, Rodney Heath and Mark Roman, are young and promising. There is decent depth there with Artrell Hawkins and Robert Bean. Chris Carter made 10 starts at strong safety after being claimed off waivers from New England in preseason. Darryl Williams returned to Cincinnati for his second hitch and made some big plays at free safety, including goal-line stops of Emmitt Smith in the Dallas game and Eddie George against the Titans. Williams finished second in tackles and returned the 30th interception of his career for a touchdown.

All aspects of the kicking game and the return game need to be improved.

Offseason shows Broncos will pay the 'Pryce' to get back on top of division.

By Larry Felser, Buffalo News

Just as it was a year ago, the West appears to be a fight to the end between Denver and Oakland, those age-old rivals. Circle the calendar for December 30, the last Sunday on the regular schedule, when the Broncos and Raiders meet in Denver. It could decide the division championship.

Denver Broncos

The Broncos' offseason moves were the sort made by a team that considers itself on the cusp of qualifying for the Super Bowl again. Key veterans were re-signed, including defensive tackle Trevor Pryce, who was made the highest-paid defender in the NFL. A platoon of helpful free agents were signed. The offensive and defensive lines were done over. So was the secondary.

What it may get down to is the quarterbacking. When Dan Marino retired in Miami they sculpted a life-size statue of him outside the stadium and constructed a shrine of his old locker, which gave it the look of Marilyn Monroe's tomb. When John Elway retired in Denver, they gave him a fond farewell, but quickly turned the page to Brian Griese, who is capable of constructing an era of his own.

Oakland Raiders

The Raiders won the division last season largely on the heroics of well-worn Rich Gannon, a career backup quarterback who turned out to be the ignitor coach John Gruden was seeking. It might happen again, but that might require an inexhaustible supply of Geritol. Gannon, 35, will be throwing to 35-year-old Tim Brown, surrounded by a cast of other graybeards.

The signing of veteran running back Charlie Garner means the Raiders will again lean heavily on its league champion running game. Garner will be blended with Tyrone Wheatley, Oakland's heavy-duty back.

Seattle Seahawks

Looking for a spoiler? Try Mike Holmgren's made-over Seattle Seahawks, who junked their underperforming defense in favor of an injection of free agents. Holmgren, who used his first season as the Seahawks' boss as a proving ground and instead got a non-proving ground, also dumped his former quarterback (Jon Kitna) and traded with his old team, Green Bay, for Brett Favre's backup, Matt Hasselbeck.

San Diego Chargers

There is a new sheriff in San Diego, John Butler, who used to make chicken salad out of chicken feathers in his Buffalo drafts. Gone are the laid-back days of ex-GM Bobby Beathard and in their place a demand for performance. The Ryan Leaf debacle is history. Doug Flutie is the new quarterback until Drew Brees is ready. The impact rookie is expected to be running back LaDainian Tomlinson.

Flutie should feel comfortable in San Diego. Only one of four quarterbacks on the Charger roster is taller than six feet. And, like Flutie, one of the quarterbacks is a former CFL star, Dave Dickenson.

Neither Flutie nor Tomlinson may make much of an impact if something dramatic doesn't happen to the Chargers' jumble of an offensive line. The only reliable lineman is Vaughn Parker, who is being moved from his normal right tackle position to left tackle, where he is far less comfortable.

Kansas City Chiefs

Dick Vermeil, who can't seem to stay retired, is Kansas City's new coach and his one-time starting quarterback in St. Louis, Trent Green, is the man around whom he will attempt to rebuild the Chiefs to the point of competing with old foes Denver and Oakland. This may be harder than putting together the Rams in his last job.

The priority tasks are to find a feature back who could give the Chiefs a consistent ground game to go with their explosive passing attack, and then to rebuild the defensive line.

Junior Seau, LB

Levon Kirkland, LB

A healthy Griese and a loaded backfield may have them soon forgetting Elway in Denver.

Last April Brian Griese was signed to a Denver contract of which his father, Hall-of-Famer Bob Griese, couldn't dream of when he was a player—$38 million over six years with a $12.5 million signing bonus. Then again, even Bob, in his best season with the Dolphins, never put together such fodder for successful negotiations.

Griese started only 10 games last year, but what a stretch of performances it was. He had a franchise-record .643 completion percentage, the best passer rating in the league (102.9), a career-record 19 touchdown passes and the second-best touchdown pass-to-interception ratio in NFL history. He was also voted a team offensive co-captain midway through the season and, despite missing six games and most of another, was voted to the Pro Bowl. No wonder Bronco fans are psyched up about the 2001 season.

Life of Brian

The entire litany of accomplishments may have been trumped by one Monday night performance. It came against blood rival Oakland on November 13 when he suffered a separated anterior cruciate joint in his right (throwing) shoulder. He left the game during Denver's second offensive series and was taken to the dressing room for examination. He returned in the second quarter, obviously in great pain. In the fourth quarter he completed all six of his passes on a 73-yard drive that put the Broncos ahead, 24-10. The Raiders tied it, 24-24, but with 1:01 to play Griese led a final, 44-yard drive to set up Jason Elam's 41-yard field goal for the victory.

If Griese put his body on the line for his team in that manner, what do you think his teammates would do for him in return? If there is such a thing as a sound investment in these days of 11-figure contracts, the Broncos made it. In a nutshell, Denver is a Super Bowl team with Griese at quarterback, probably not a playoff team without him.

Even with Griese out of the lineup for as much as he was, only St. Louis had a more impressive offensive performance last season, and the Broncos were far more balanced than the Rams.

Quarterback Brian Griese earned his first Pro Bowl trip last season by completing a franchise-record 64 percent of his passes.

Running back Terrell Davis, who played in only five games last season, is one of just nine players in history to win NFL and Super Bowl MVP in the same season (1998).

Trouble in 3s

A signal that Mike Shanahan stocked up all his nuts for a comfortable January was his retention of all three of his admirable running backs—Terrell Davis, Olandis Gary and Mike Anderson. There were teams salivating for just one of them. The last time Davis was fully healthy, 1998, he gained more than 2,000 yards and scored 19 touchdowns. After Davis was injured in the fourth game of the '99 season, Gary rushed for 1,159 yards in his rookie year. Shanahan intends to make use of all three, even if he has to make Anderson the fullback.

Griese begins with two receivers coming off 100-catch seasons, Rod Smith and Ed McCaffrey. Shanahan, looking for a speed guy in three-receiver sets, also added Eddie Kennison, who can be electrifying when he's in the mood to play. Young tight end Dwayne Carswell may be in the breakout category, since he caught 49 passes in his first serious playing time. Patrick Hape was signed from Tampa Bay to back up Carswell.

The Broncos get the most out of an offensive line that is largely anonymous. Serious money was spent to re-sign right guard Dan Neil and right tackle Matt Lepsis. Tom Nalen is the constant at center. Ex-Jaguar Todd Fordham will contend with Cooper Carlisle for the vacant left tackle job, while ex-49er Phil Ostrowski challenges Lenny Friedman at left guard. The consistent work of this underappreciated group is reflected in the yardage total of the last three starting running backs.

Line alterations

Major alterations were made on the defensive line, not surprising since the Broncos finished dead last in NFL pass defense and inconsistent heat on enemy passers was a big part of that. Ex-Cowboy Leon Lett, a terror when he isn't being a headache to his employers, may slide in next to Pryce, who had a dozen sacks last year. Ex-Chief/Raider Chester McGlockton, another "in-the-mood" talent, will be a sink-or-swim addition at end or tackle. Keith Washington, who couldn't get much playing time amid all that talent in Baltimore, is another new end.

Shanahan needs sturdy play from his line because the linebacking is questionable. Not only is Bill Romanowski's bad-guy act getting old, so is he at 35. Al Wilson had a poor season at middle linebacker and John Mobley is a smallish weakside linebacker. Ian Gold, also on the small side, is the relief man.

Denard Walker was signed from Tennessee to play right corner. Deltha O'Neal and ex-Charger Daryll Lewis will take a run at Ray Crockett's job on the right side. The No. 1 draftee, corner Willie Middlebrooks, will play somewhere. Kenoy Kennedy is the free safety, if he's healthy, and Billy Jenkins returns at free safety.

Minor injuries resulted in a subpar year for placekicker Elam from beyond the 40-yard line, but he's expected to bounce back. There is less optimism for punter Tom Rouen, who will get a major challenge from rookie Nick Harris. O'Neal is the top punt and kickoff return man.

Have the Raiders already aged out of Super Bowl contention?

Al Davis, the Raiders' managing Svengali, is a professional plaintiff once again, suing the NFL over his claimed Oakland-to-L.A. shuttle. The last time that happened, he neglected his specialty, football, and the team decayed.

Last season the Raiders won their first division title in a decade and now they're already beginning to look like the over-the-hill gang. Quarterback Rich Gannon is 35. So is his best receiver, Tim Brown, and veteran corner Eric Allen. Guard Steve Wisniewski is 34. Middle linebacker Greg Biekert is a slow 32. Free-agent pass rusher Trace Armstrong is also 35.

The Raiders are still a good team, honed to consistent sharpness by coach Jon Gruden. But how will all that age play at the end of the season when they close against Tennessee and then Denver?

Rich gets richer

If Gannon has something left, the Raiders will be a factor to the end. After years of watching others do the playing, Gannon threw for 3,430 yards and 28 touchdowns, but more important was his role as the catalyst for an attack that scored 479 points, third in the NFL. He was the stabilizing figure for a team that needed stabilization. Who knows how far the Raiders would have gone if massive Tony Siragusa of Baltimore hadn't taken that belly flop on Gannon in the AFC championship game?

Oakland had the No. 1 rushing offense in the NFL last year and the Raiders' best chance to reach Super Bowl XXXVI is that the ground game could be even better with the signing of free-agent running back Charlie Garner. Tyrone Wheatley had a 1,046-yard season for Oakland last year and Garner gained 1,142 for San Francisco, more than twice the retired Napoleon Kaufman's output in his final season. Wheatley averaged 4.5 yards per carry, Garner 4.4. Expect Oakland to run the ball at least the 520 times it did in 2000.

tackle; right guard Mo Collins, whose switch from tackle made him more efficient; and center Barrett Robbins. Wisniewski wouldn't be the first aging offensive lineman to be refreshed by a shot at the Super Bowl. Matt Stinchcomb is a corner at left tackle and Barry Sims can fill in at guard or tackle. This line is about more than the running attack. Enemy sacks were cut in half last season, from 49 to 28.

Brown had 11 touchdown catches among his 76 receptions last year, but Davis didn't supply Gruden with any reinforcements of note in the passing game. The coach will have to scrounge around for someone to supplement Brown. Ex-Ram Roland Williams, known more for his blocking, is the Raiders' new tight end.

The pass defense was down with the bottom-feeders, allowing 25 touchdown passes and ranking 25th in the league. Part of the reason was Oakland's tough run defense, which led to 70 percent of the total yardage allowed by the defense to come via passing. The Raiders need an injection of better linebackers and safeties and some renewed zeal for the top lineman, Darrell Russell.

The No. 1 draft pick was used on Florida State safety Derrick Gibson, a big guy (6-1, 211) who started every game during the last three seasons for the Seminoles. He was at his best when interested. In the showdown game against Miami last season, he had 13 tackles. Gruden will have to make do with Anthony Dorsett at the other safety. Even with Allen at an uncertain age, cornerback is well protected with the spectacular Charles Woodson and Tory James. Considering the lack of receiving talent, Woodson could take an occasional turn on offense.

Quarterback Rich Gannon (top) and wide receiver Tim Brown both enter the upcoming season at age 35.

102 CAREER STARTS

Free-agent pickup Charlie Garner (right) and Oakland's returning leading rusher Tyrone Wheatley both went over 1,000 yards last season.

Aging linebacking corps

The entire linebacking unit is a senior cast. William Thomas, 32, made some big-time plays, and so did Elijah Alexander. If Biekert doesn't have to move far, he's still a force against the run. No linebacker was drafted.

Since the Raiders get strong, all-around play from ends Tony Bryant and Regan Upshaw, Armstrong, who led the AFC with 16.5 sacks, can be used exclusively to hound the quarterback and won't be worn down.

When the mood is upon him, Russell is the best tackle in the conference. His partner, massive Grady Jackson, had eight sacks and plugs a huge hole.

Sebastian Janikowski missed 10 of 32 field goals and finished 14th in the AFC. That isn't what Davis had in mind when he made him the Raiders' No. 1 draft pick last year. It was softened a tad by the fact his kickoffs allowed Oakland to finish third in the conference in covering those kicks.

Cornerback Charles Woodson (top left) and defensive line stalwarts Darrell Russell and Grady Jackson helped the opportunistic Oakland defense finish third in the NFL in turnover differential (+17).

Punter Shane Lechler, on the other hand, had a great rookie year, finishing second in the NFL with a 45.9-yard average and first with a net average of 38 yards. He should be a Raider fixture. The return game may be improved by the signing of Reggie Barlow, who needs to be refreshed after a couple of subpar seasons in Jacksonville. ■

AFC WEST

New quarterback, lots of high-profile free agents and a big draft signal new start for Mike Holmgren.

When the Buffalo Bills came to Seattle two days before last Christmas, it seemed like a perfect "Jingle Bells" scenario for the home team, an ideal opportunity to take some of the sting out of a poor season. The Bills had lost four in a row, were about to see both their general manager and coach fired, and their quarterback quandary remained unresolved. They had bumbled their way out of the playoffs and had a cross-country "bah, humbug" plane trip home confronting them.

As it turned out, it was a classic run-for-the-bus game, but not as expected. The spare ribs barbecued the chef, 42-23.

After watching his team conduct a festival of missed tackles and blown coverages, guaranteeing it would end up dead last in NFL defense, Mike Holmgren knew he had to make radical changes. He did. There will be six new defensive starters and a new quarterback. If Holmgren is going to watch miserable football being played, at least he will be coaching fresh faces.

Defense dips into free-agent pool

The new defensive starters will be free agents Chad Eaton of New England and John Randle of Minnesota at the tackles, Levon Kirkland of Pittsburgh at middle linebacker, Marcus Robertson of Tennessee at free safety, Reggie Tongue at strong safety, and either rookie Ken Lucas or pro sophomore Ike Charlton at corner.

It will be the task of defensive coordinator Steve Sidwell to meld the old guys with the promising youngsters. Kirkland moves from the 3-4 alignment he played so nobly with the Steelers to the 4-3. Randle can be moved from inside to outside, depending on the situation. Robertson has enough left to direct traffic in the secondary and brings out the best in the kids surrounding him—potential future stars Shawn Springs at left corner, either Charlton or Lucas at right corner and Tongue at strong safety.

Considering that the Seahawks surrendered 6,391 total yards, third-highest yield in NFL history, age doesn't really matter in this case. The injection of players from winning teams—Kirkland, Randle and Robertson, in particular—might even inject some energy into a pass rush that produced a mere 27 sacks despite having such pass rushers as end Michael Sinclair and blitzing linebacker Chad Brown on the field. Brown and right end Lamar King shared the team lead with a paltry six sacks each. Kirkland moves between Brown, his old Steeler teammate, and young Anthony Simmons.

Third-round pick Darrell Jackson became the first rookie since Joey Galloway (1995) to start for the Seahawks.

Despite his advancing age, Ricky Watters turned in his highest per-carry average (4.5) since 1993 last season.

Hasselbeck new QB

The rollover on offense may not be as dramatic, but there could be as many changes. The big one was the trade with Green Bay for promising young quarterback Matt Hasselbeck. No one backing up Brett Favre gets to play much. Hasselbeck attempted only 19 passes last season for the Packers, completing 10 for 104 yards and a touchdown. Yet Holmgren had seen too much of Jon Kitna and Brock Huard and is ready to chart another course. The one new asset Hasselbeck brings is mobility. He's now in the hands of Jim Zorn, the Seahawks' first star quarterback who is in charge of the position 25 years later.

Seattle coaches were mystified last year when talented players like defensive end Michael Sinclair (left) and linebacker Chad Brown produced few big plays, giving the Seahawk defense a rank of dead last in the NFL.

Holmgren took a look at his incumbent wide receivers and said, in effect, "none of the above—except for Darrell Jackson." As a rookie Jackson caught 53 passes, averaging 13.5 yards per catch and producing six touchdowns. But the major change was the drafting of Koren Robinson, generally considered one of the two best wide receivers in the draft. Robinson, who played just two years at North Carolina State, turns catches into touchdowns. Since there would be an overload of inexperience if Jackson and Robinson do most of the playing with a beginning starting quarterback, Holmgren was hoping to sign Jerry Rice as a role model and mentor before training camp opened.

Shaun's time to shine

If the running game isn't another area of change by opening day, it should be by mid-season. Ricky Watters had another big year, 1,242 rushing yards and 63 catches, but he's 32 and Holmgren has his future, Shaun Alexander, in the on-deck circle. Alexander had a better per-carry average (4.9 to 4.5), but he got the ball just 64 times. Alexander's carries must increase as a matter of coaching diplomacy and, when that happens, Watters always becomes unhappy. Something has to give.

The strength of the offensive line is in the young tackles, Walter Jones on the left side and Chris McIntosh on the right. Jones' run blocking is now close to his efficiency as a pass blocker, so whoever gets the ball will be aimed to the left side frequently. The extra first-round pick brings the best guard in college football, Steve Hutchinson of Michigan, but he may do a lot of watching as a rookie. That's because Chris Gray, the emergency center a season ago, has moved back to left guard with the healing of center Robbie Tobeck's knee. Floyd Wedderburn, after a year of grooming, has a grip on right guard. Considering the extreme youth of this team, rookie Heath Evans of Auburn is expected to join his young peers as the starting fullback. Veteran Christian Fauria remains the starting tight end until Holmgren can find someone better.

Surprise return ace Charlie Rogers finished in the NFL's top 10 in both kickoff and punt returns, but he also fumbled five times. Another surprise, free-agent rookie kicker Rian Lindell, missed just two of 17 field goal attempts and, more impressively, was 10-of-11 from 40 yards or beyond. Jeff Feagles' punting was nothing special.

For a team so young and with so many changes, the Seahawks were smiled upon by the schedule-maker. Five of the first seven games are at home and an open date was thrown into the bargain.

Who needs Vick? The Chargers have Tomlinson, Flutie and coach-in-waiting.

The general manager is new. The quarterbacks are new. So is the top running back and the starting cornerbacks. Almost everything about the Chargers is new, including the approach to football.

Life of Riley

So what is Mike Riley still doing in the coach's office? He finished 1-15, worst in the NFL a year ago. He wanted to interview for the vacant job at the University of Southern California, where he once served as the highly admired offensive coordinator. But the Spanos family, which owns the Chargers, said no. Why, is not clear.

Riley's uncomfortable position soils what is otherwise a U-turn on the NFL highway for this team. John Butler, the new GM, wasn't allowed to name his own coach—yet. Norv Turner, browbeaten out of Washington by the Redskins' meddling owner, Daniel Snyder, is now the Chargers' offensive coordinator. To most observers Turner, a superb handler of quarterbacks, is the Chargers' coach-in-waiting. The players know it. They also know that Riley wanted to be at USC. It's another bizarre chapter in San Diego football.

Not so bizarre is what the Chargers did with the first pick in the draft. Whether Butler wanted to use it on Michael Vick or not is beside the point now. The end result was that a team with enormous needs now has the best running back in the draft, LaDainian Tomlinson, and its quarterback of the future, Drew Brees. Tomlinson should start immediately, while Brees will watch Doug Flutie for a season or two.

Flutie is no ordinary 38-year-old, granted. But he'll need every ounce of "Artful Dodger" still left in his body behind the Chargers' undermanned and depleted offensive line. For almost 20 years he's built a reputation for making something out of nothing on the football field and never was that more necessary than it is in San Diego now. Brees may be happy he's not going to play much for at least a year. By then, Butler, who couldn't cure nearly all the Chargers' ills in one off-season, should be able to go to work on the offensive line.

TCU terror goes West

Not only were the Chargers last in the NFL in running the ball, they were outgained by 21 individual ball carriers. Their average team output rushing per game was 66 yards. In his last two seasons as a collegian, Tomlinson averaged 6.4 yards a carry and scored 40 touchdowns. He may not turn around the San Diego ground game in one season, but he shouldn't do it any harm, either.

Joe Bugel, the offensive line coach, is asked to make chicken salad out of chicken scratch. His only solid starters are left tackle Vaughn Parker and center Roman Fortin. Kendyl Jacox, normally a center, will fill in at right guard. Ben Coleman and Raleigh Roundtree were still trying to escape via the bargain free-agency route at mini-camp time. There were other priorities in the draft, so Butler didn't get to the offensive line until the fifth round when he selected Elliot Silvers of Washington. Damion McIntosh, from last year's rookie crop, or Ed Ellis will be the right tackle. Fullback Fred McCrary will have to block like a guard. No one in the Charger training camp will resemble Tony Boselli.

The Chargers have neglected their wide receivers for years and it shows. There is not much beyond starters Jeff Graham and Curtis Conway. Considering the passing game's limitations, each had a decent year. Graham averaged 16.5 yards on his 55 catches and Conway 13.4 on 53. When Flutie looks for help in a tight situation, his main rescuer is likely to be Freddie Jones, the reliable tight end who led the team with 71 receptions. No receivers were drafted, but Tim Dwight, on whom Butler insisted being included in the deal with Atlanta for Vick's rights, could turn out to be more than a welcome return man. He caught three touchdown passes for the Falcons in a cameo role last season.

Tight end Freddie Jones (below) and Jeff Graham finished one-two in receptions for the Chargers last season with 71 and 55, respectively.

The Charger defense, led by All-Pro linebacker Junior Seau (center) and last year's defensive team MVP, safety Rodney Harrison, got a major boost on the interior with the free-agent signing of end Marcellus Wiley (left), who led Buffalo with 10.5 sacks last season.

Marvelous Marcellus

Butler's free-agent moves were designed to plug the worst leaks in a defense that allowed 440 points, most in the AFC. Not surprisingly, he signed one of the most desirable free-agent defenders of all, Buffalo defensive end Marcellus Wiley. Butler drafted the ex-Columbia star and nurtured him during his three years as a Bill. Last season he replaced Bruce Smith and led the team with 10.5 sacks. He's also a plus in the dressing room. If Raylee Johnson returns strongly, Riley will have a pair of bookend pass rushers. Johnson had 10.5 sacks for the '99 Chargers, then tore up his knee in preseason last year. The tackles are Jamal Williams and tough guy John Parrella, whom Butler drafted years ago for Buffalo.

It's a clean sweep at cornerback, where woeful play contributed to an NFL-worst 33 passing touchdowns yielded. Free agents Ryan McNeil and Alex Molden are the new starters. Strong safety Rodney Harrison remains one of the league's toughest hitters. Rogers Beckett, the young free safety, should benefit from being surrounded by all that experience.

Junior Seau remains the best defensive player on the team at outside linebacker, but Carlos Polk, who may push Eric Hill as the middle backer, and Zeke Moreno, who comes with a reputation for making plays, are key draftees. Gerald Dixon is the other incumbent outside backer.

There is a jump ball to decide who replaces John Carney as the kicker. Punter Darren Bennett's 46.2-yard average led the NFL. Dwight can be scary as a returner.

Three of the Chargers' first five games are on the road, but they don't meet a team with a winning 2000 record until Denver comes to town October 21.

Doug Flutie, acquired as the new Charger QB, joins his fourth NFL team at age 38. At right, punter Darren Bennett earned his second Pro Bowl selection last season, averaging 46.2 yards per punt.

AFC WEST

The coach who wouldn't leave is a long way from a Super Bowl with his new team in Missouri.

Pamphlets should be passed around the NFL with Dick Vermeil's photo on them. "Stop This Man From Coaching Again," they should say.

Less than two years from the day when he tearfully retired as head coach of the Super Bowl champion St. Louis Rams, here is America's most compulsive coach, leaving the slippers and pipe and grandchildren at home to move further south in Missouri, where he'll attempt to play mother hen to the backsliding Chiefs.

Talk about tears.

Here's what confronts Vermeil: A team that lost six of its last eight in 2000, five consecutive road games, doesn't run the ball well and did nothing in the off-season to make itself measurably better.

Fullback Tony Richardson was named to Dr. Z's Sports Illustrated All-Pro Team last season after rushing for a career-best 697 yards and catching 58 passes.

Vermeil did trade for Trent Green, the quarterback he entrusted with the Rams before Kurt Warner unexpectedly surfaced. But the Chiefs were one of the better passing attacks in the league under the departed Elvis Grbac, and if he had been kept it wouldn't have cost K.C. the first-round pick it sent to the Rams for Green.

High (stepping) Priest

Vermeil signed former Baltimore running back Priest Holmes, who lost his job with the Ravens to Jamal Lewis. The coming of Holmes creates a strange situation. Tony Richardson was the Chiefs' leading ground-gainer last year. He had just 10 carries more than Holmes did in Baltimore, yet outgained the newcomer by 109 yards; had a better per-carry average, 4.7 yards to 4.3; his longest run was 33 yards opposed to Holmes' 21; and he scored one more touchdown. Richardson also caught 58 passes to Holmes' 32. Now Richardson is nominally the fullback, but Vermeil says he'll also see action as the feature back. Go figure.

Green-er pastures?

It's difficult to see how the Chiefs' passing game did anything but tread water with the quarterback switch—even though it's comfortable water. Green finished second in the NFL passer ratings last season, but he attempted only 240 throws after replacing the injured Warner. Grbac launched 307 more passes and still landed among the top 10 passers with an 89.9 rating. Green threw for 16 touchdowns with the Rams' high-octane offense. Grbac threw 28.

Two-time Pro Bowler Tony Gonzalez established himself as the most dangerous tight end in the game last season with a franchise-record 93 catches and nine TDs.

Ram quarterbacks don't throw much to their tight ends, but Green better get used to it. He now has the No. 1 pass-catching tight end in the league, Tony Gonzalez, who had 93 receptions, 1,203 yards and nine touchdowns for Grbac. He's still K.C.'s No. 1 offensive weapon. Derrick Alexander had the best per-catch average in the AFC, 17.8 on his 78 catches, 10 of them for touchdowns. Sylvester Morris caught 48 as a rookie and his play suggested even bigger things to come. Another Vermeil trade with the Rams brings Tony Horne, who caught only four passes last season but two of them went for touchdowns. He may be the No. 3 receiver in the multiple-set formations Vermeil likes so well.

Vermeil's chances of improving the running game are heightened by the presence of one of the best young tackle tandems—John Tait on the left side and Victor Riley on the right. Will Shields' value at right guard is underlined by his $7 million signing bonus, but journeyman Jeff Blackshear may be replaced by little-used reserve Marcus Spears on the left side. There will be a scramble to replace retired Tim Grunhard at center. Casey Wiegmann, signed as a free agent from the Bears, may inherit the job.

Mr. Robinson's new neighborhood

Greg Robinson, who coordinated Denver's Super Bowl defenses, is the new man under Vermeil. He has a reputation as an aggressive strategist. What he doesn't have in Kansas City is an overload of talent. The defense was not addressed in free agency and no one on the draft list appears to have the stuff to make an immediate impact. The statistics from 2000 bear out the contention that sacks aren't everything. The Chiefs had 51 and were still mediocre in every other category.

Steve Martin, who plays run pretty well, replaces the departed Chester McGlockton as Dan Williams' tackle partner. Left end Eric Hicks finished third in the AFC with 14 sacks. Duane Clemons is the right end. John Browning backs up at both end and tackle. Two of the first three draftees, Eric Downing of Syracuse and Monty Beisel of Kansas State, were defensive linemen. The linebacking crew of Donnie Edwards, Marcus Patton and Mike Maslowski is an active one.

Corners Pat Dennis and William Bartee learned hard lessons as rookies, but they have to play since there is little else. Eric Warfield got to start a year ago, but he merely demonstrated that he was a reliable nickel back. Jerome Woods is the free safety and Greg Wesley is at strong safety.

The Chiefs rarely try field goals over 40 yards with Todd Peterson. Last year's punter, Todd Sauerbrun, was released and quickly replaced by Atlanta free agent Dan Stryzinski, who signed a five-year deal. Horne, who has returned three kickoffs for touchdowns in the last two years, upgrades that department. The punt return job is open unless Horne is used for both assignments.

Eagles will fly higher than Giants, thanks to continuing emergence of McNabb, return of Staley and the addition of top pick Mitchell.

By Don Pierson, Chicago Tribune

The only guarantee is there are no guarantees. Coach Jim Fassel used them up last season and there's no guarantee his New York Giants or any other division winner can repeat.

One thing's for sure: The NFC East is a diminished division without the now-retired Troy Aikman, its quarterback of the '90s.

The Giants did as well as any of their rivals in the offseason battle to keep their nucleus intact and address specific needs. If they can maintain their uncanny mastery over the Eagles, Fassel could find himself in the prediction business again.

Philadelphia Eagles

After going 0-3 against the New York Giants last season (0-9 in the last four years), the Eagles figure to beat Fassel sometime just by the law of averages. The recovery of Duce Staley from a knee injury should help quarterback Donovan McNabb, who didn't need a whole lot of help in a breakout season last year.

The rapid development of No. 1 draft choice Freddie Mitchell of UCLA could mean the difference between a title and another year of building.

New York Giants

The Giants came through everywhere to win the NFC championship. Kerry Collins overcame doubts at quarterback. Tiki Barber became an outstanding runner/receiver. Michael Strahan, Jason Sehorn, Jesse Armstead, Keith Hamilton and Michael Barrow rejuvenated the defense. They stayed healthy. They enjoyed a career season that will be hard to duplicate. They needed stronger play at right defensive end and signed free agent Kenny Holmes from the Titans. They needed help at cornerback and used their first two draft picks to get it.

Washington Redskins

Maybe there is a guarantee. Daniel Snyder will remain impatient and frustrated. After loading up last season to no avail, Snyder has watched his team stagger under the weight of a heavy payroll. Marty Schottenheimer is the latest big name to sign on. If only coaches could play quarterback.

But there are signs that Snyder is backing off and allowing his veteran coach to call the shots, starting with the drafting of Clemson receiver Rod Gardner over Snyder favorite Santana Moss of the University of Miami. Schottenheimer's biggest challenge remains quarterback Jeff George.

Dallas Cowboys

Spoiled by a dozen years with Aikman, Cowboys owner Jerry Jones is about to discover what a rare luxury he enjoyed at the most important position. Jones isn't trying to kid himself or anybody else. He already has warned fans to wait until next year. It's not what coach Dave Campo wants to hear.

The Cowboys are relying on journeyman quarterback Tony Banks to throw bombs to Joey Galloway and Rocket Ismail. He better just hand off to future Hall-of-Famer Emmitt Smith.

Arizona Cardinals

Dave McGinnis is a defensive coach with no defense. The strong, young defensive line the Cardinals tried to build disintegrated in its infancy. McGinnis will try to win on offense, hoping to jump-start quarterback Jake Plummer with better running and receiving. If they finish anyplace but last, McGinnis should get Coach-of-the-Year votes.

The Cardinals are so resigned to rebuilding on defense that they traded away their best defensive player, cornerback Aeneas Williams.

NFC EAST

Eagles believe they're much more than McNabb and are ready to prove it with a division title.

With all due respect to Jeffrey Lurie, quarterback Donovan McNabb owns the Eagles. His running and passing accounted for 76 percent of their offense last year, slightly more than the contributions Jeff Garcia made to the 49ers, Daunte Culpepper to the Vikings and Rich Gannon to the Raiders. McNabb even caught two passes, which is more than the other quarterbacks did. It only seemed like he was coach Andy Reid's leading receiver.

When running back Duce Staley went down with a season-ending injury the fifth week, McNabb took up the slack and became the only quarterback to lead his team in rushing. When the Tampa Bay Buccaneers focused on stopping him in the playoffs, he beat them anyway.

For an encore, the Eagles must find a way to beat the New York Giants. They lost all three games to them last year and their losing streak goes back to 1997, before either Reid or McNabb arrived. Neither can be blamed for it, but both must find a way out.

McNabb clicked in Reid's quarterback-friendly system the way Brett Favre did under him in Green Bay. With more weapons around him, the possibilities are enticing, but the Eagles enter the 2001 season with ifs attached. McNabb's backups are Koy Detmer and Ron Powlus.

Hoping Duce stays wild

Staley suffered a sprain of a ligament in the right ankle that required surgery and pins, so the Eagles will be keeping fingers crossed that he survives the summer and is ready to roll. They can't afford another season of relying on McNabb to hand off to himself. Veteran Chris Warren supplied a break down the stretch but is not the full-time answer. Cecil Martin and Stanley Pritchett are the fullbacks who hope they are again blocking for Staley.

Addition by subtraction?

Torrance Small caught 40 passes for a 14-yard average and was released. Charles Johnson caught 56 passes, seven for touchdowns, and was released. So Reid is counting on No. 1 draft pick Freddie Mitchell of UCLA and last year's second-round pick, Todd Pinkston, to emerge quickly. Of all the promising receivers in a draft full of them, Mitchell sounds more confident than any of them, and none of them seem shy.

Donovan McNabb finished second behind St. Louis' Marshall Faulk in the voting for NFL Most Valuable Player.

The Eagles are counting on Duce Staley's return to health to lend needed balance to their offense.

Despite the perception that he does it all, McNabb spread the ball around better than any other passer in the league, hitting 11 receivers for at least 10 catches apiece. His leading receiver was tight end Chad Lewis, who was to the Eagles what Shannon Sharpe was to Baltimore. His 69 catches led all NFC tight ends. The Eagles landed ex-Eagle James Thrash from the Redskins to replace Small. They want Mitchell to replace Johnson and they hope Pinkston makes big strides in his second year. Reid cut Johnson to make more room for young Na Brown, Gari Scott and Elijah Thurmon to develop. The backup tight end is Jeff Thomason.

The Eagles finally got settled on their offensive line, although high-priced right tackle Jon Runyan will have to figure out better ways to handle Giants defensive end Michael Strahan. Left tackle Tra Thomas, center Bubba Miller

The 6-7, 349-pound Thomas and 6-7, 330-pound Runyan are two of the biggest tackles in the league, perfect bookends for McNabb.

"I want aggressive, mean, tough guys up front because that's where you win football games," says Reid, a former offensive lineman. "I like those types of players on both sides of the ball."

The Eagles added another ex-Eagle, defensive end N.D. Kalu, from the Redskins to complement rush end Hugh Douglas, who blossomed with 15 sacks last year. Brandon Whiting will start at left end and move inside to replace starting tackle Hollis Thomas in passing situations. Big things are again expected from tackle Corey Simon, who was a standout as a rookie with 9 1/2 sacks.

Defensive tackle Corey Simon (left), who broke the Eagles' rookie record for sacks last season, and linebacker Jeremiah Trotter make the Philly defense strong up the middle.

Paul Grasmanis backs him up. Greg Jefferson is returning from a knee injury as a backup end and third-round draft choice Derrick Burgess has similar credentials as Douglas when he came into the league.

The re-signing of middle linebacker Jeremiah Trotter solidified a strong area, with Barry Gardner and Carlos Emmons flanking leading tackler and Pro Bowler Trotter. Ike Reese and Mike Caldwell are backups and Reid drafted promising Quinton Caver in the second round and athletic Markus Steele in the fourth.

Secondary to none

The secondary is so solid and athletic with corners Troy Vincent and Bobby Taylor and safeties Damon Moore and Brian Dawkins that Reid proclaims it second to none in the league. Vincent has 12 interceptions in the last two seasons. Backups are Jason Bostic, Al Harris, Rashard Cook, William Hampton and Tim Hauck.

Ageless Brian Mitchell returns as the return specialist. Placekicker David Akers is coming off a breakthrough year. The Eagles hope punter Sean Landeta remains ageless.

Giants have key pieces back in place, with supplements, for realistic run at a return trip to the Super Bowl.

Upgrading a Super Bowl team is a daunting task. Achieving a Super Bowl is hard enough. Maintaining a high level of play is harder. Improving is hardest of all. The Giants think they have done it by keeping their most important free agents and adding players at key positions.

Despite not making the Pro Bowl for the first time in four years, Michael Strahan had a solid 2000 season with 9.5 sacks.

The good offseason fortune of coach Jim Fassel began with his own four-year, $11 million contract extension and the news that defensive coordinator John Fox would return. Left out of most job interviews by the Giants' Super Bowl run, Fox had no choice but to come back and try harder to climb from No. 2 to No. 1.

With young offensive coordinator Sean Payton also back, Fassel will be directing a familiar cast in an effort to prove last season was no fluke. To keep the nucleus of the NFC champions intact, the Giants re-signed versatile running back/receiver Tiki Barber and solid cornerback Jason Sehorn, then decided their No. 1 draft choice of five years ago, defensive end Cedric Jones, was no longer good enough to do the job required. They signed defensive end Kenny Holmes from the Tennessee Titans in hopes he can become a more productive counterpart to the star of the defense, Michael Strahan.

Kerry-ing forward

All this is designed to maintain a degree of comfort around quarterback Kerry Collins, whose welcome emergence last season took a wrong turn in the Super Bowl loss to Baltimore but cannot be allowed to regress. Collins appears on the verge of bigger things than most experts expected from him, and one bad Super Bowl experience shouldn't deter the Giants from their path.

Collins came up big more times than not, and his patient and classy performances during grueling pre-Super Bowl press conferences demonstrated a maturity that almost made the loss palatable. With alcohol abuse behind him, Collins showed he can handle pressure. The reliable Jason Garrett returns as the backup, with draft choice Jesse Palmer a future possibility.

Barber on duty

Barber looked like the Giants' answer to the Rams' Marshall Faulk with his ability not only to run and catch but to endure. Only 195 pounds, Barber stayed healthy most of the year, then played with a cast on a broken forearm during the playoffs. He was helped by rookie Ron Dayne, who is expected to improve his conditioning this season and take more of the load off Barber as the Giants continue to emphasize the play-action attack. If fullback Greg Comella gets Dayne to share his work-outs the way Barber did, Fassel will be happy.

Collins developed enviable rapport with both starting wide receivers, Amani Toomer and Ike Hilliard, hitting Toomer for seven touchdown passes and Hilliard for eight. The Giants would like to get more from third receiver Joe Jurevicius and they hope speedy second-year prospect Ron Dixon can develop into more than a return specialist. They also need more from the tight end position, where Howard Cross and Dan Campbell reside.

Tiki Barber set a franchise record with 2,089 all-purpose yards last season.

QB Kerry Collins (left) proved durable, throwing each of New York's 529 passes last season, while rookie power back Ron Dayne registered the second-highest rushing total ever for a Giants rookie with 770 yards.

The surprise of last season was how the rebuilt offensive line jelled into such a cohesive and capable unit, but it's time to worry about the future of 38-year-old left tackle Lomas Brown, who can't last forever at such a demanding position. Right tackle Luke Petitgout was Brown's backup last year, so the prospects are thin, especially if Mike Rosenthal doesn't continue to improve as the future right tackle. Guards Glenn Parker and Ron Stone and center Dusty Zeigler are solid inside, with Derek Engler and Jason Whittle the backups.

On defense, Holmes is expected to complement Strahan the way he complemented Jevon Kearse in Tennessee, where he registered eight sacks last season. Jones had only 3 1/2 in New York, not enough from the right side. Fox expects second-year tackle Cornelius Griffin to start beside Keith Hamilton, giving the Amani Toomer (left) went over 1,000 yards receiving for the second straight season, while Jessie Armstead was selected to play in this fourth straight Pro Bowl.

Giants a front four comparable to New Orleans and Tampa Bay in the NFC. The Giants chose Holmes over free agent Simeon Rice partly because of his ability to play the run. Hamilton is coming off a great year marred only by a Pro Bowl snub. He had 10 sacks, beating out Strahan by a half. The backups are Ryan Hale, Jeremiah Parker and George Williams.

Busy backers

Linebacker Jesse Armstead remains the soul of the team, the kind of player who won't let others slack following a short offseason. With middle linebacker Micheal Barrow, Fox has two of the more active tacklers in the business. Second-year prospect Brandon Short will replace departed free agent Ryan Phillips. Pete Monty, Jack Golden and Kevin Lewis are in reserve.

Sehorn remains the key to the secondary despite getting burned for the first touchdown in the Super Bowl. Dave Thomas was a pleasant surprise on the other side, but the Giants were so determined to upgrade they spent their first two draft picks on corners Will Allen and William Peterson, trading up for the first time in their history for Allen. Strong safety Sam Garnes and free safety Shaun Williams return. The backups are Reggie Stephens, Emmanuel McDaniel, Lyle West and Omar Stoutmire.

The Giants let punter Brad Maynard go to Chicago after his production slipped. He will be replaced by Rodney Williams. Dixon is outstanding as a kick return man. Barber spreads himself thin as a punt returner. John Markham was drafted to challenge Jaret Holmes as the replacement for kicker Brad Daluiso.

Stephen Davis (top) finished third in the NFC in rushing; veteran Darrell Green has his eye on a starting spot at age 41.

Snyder hopes Schottenheimer's old school can bring Redskins' grades up.

About 100 Redskins employees, not counting players, have either been fired or walked out of the Daniel Snyder regime. After spending nearly $100 million on last year's payroll (not counting office staff) and getting only eight wins, Snyder is discovering that the football business is different. You can scheme, spend and dictate all you want, but you cannot control what happens on Sundays. That's why more people pay to watch football than pay to watch IBM executives sit at computer screens.

Now Snyder is trying to salvage a disaster by hiring an old-school coach, Marty Schottenheimer, and giving him more say than he ever allowed fired Norv Turner to have. If Snyder has learned anything in his short tenure, it is that he indeed needs expert advice.

While working last season as a television commentator, Schottenheimer doubted he could work for a meddler like Snyder, but a $10 million contract helped change his impression.

Offense, by George

Whether Schottenheimer can coexist with quarterback Jeff George is a more important and problematic issue. A conservative by nature, Schottenheimer does not have a track record of winning with fly-by-night, throw-it-deep passers like the talented-but-tainted George. Offensive coordinator Jimmy Raye likes a more controlled West Coast-style passing game, and if George can't get used to handing off to Stephen Davis, the Redskins will find a quarterback who likes to do what he is told, such as Super Bowl winner Trent Dilfer. Second-year man Todd Husak might find himself pushing George, and fourth-round draft pick Sage Rosenfels might suddenly get more notice.

Even (keel) Stephen

Davis is one of the few certainties surrounding the Redskins in 2001, and he is a good place for Schottenheimer to start. Always partial to the running game, Schottenheimer spent the final years of his tenure in Kansas City searching for somebody like Davis. Coming off seasons of 1,400 and 1,300 yards, Davis has established himself as a premier workhorse. Skip Hicks and workhorse receiver/fullback Larry Centers were released, and Schottenheimer hired an old favorite from Kansas City, Donnell Bennett.

After losing solid receiver James Thrash to Philadelphia, old receiver Irving Fryar to age and flaky receiver Albert Connell to New Orleans, the Redskins were left with question mark Michael Westbrook coming off a knee injury and untested second-year prospect Derrius Thompson. So a receiver was crucial in the draft and Schottenheimer picked Clemson's Rod Gardner over Snyder favorite Santana Moss and added Darnerian McCants in the fifth round. He also added ex-Chief Kevin Lockett. Tight end Stephen Alexander is the top returning receiver, but George ordinarily likes to throw deeper than tight ends. Zeron Flemister is promising at tight end and Walter Rasby was added for depth there. Among the talented crop of receivers in the draft, Gardner was compared most to Cris Carter—not a bad recommendation.

Tackles Chris Samuels and Jon Jansen are two of the best young bookends in the business, but the rest of the offensive line is in flux. Guards Tre Johnson and Keith Sims (both since released) and center Cory Raymer all got hurt, leaving the middle of the line to second-year man Michael Moore, journeyman Jay Leeuwenburg and reserve Mark Fischer. Moore or Derrick Fletcher could start at right guard, and Carolina pickup Matt Campbell will start at left guard, but Schottenheimer is taking applications.

The Redskins spent a lot of money on defense both under Snyder and previously, only for naught. Although the ranking jumped from New coach Marty Schottenheimer's (left) no-frills approach should suit defensive end Marco Coleman, who kept his head down with a career-high 12 sacks and first-ever Pro Bowl invite last season.

30th to fourth last season under coordinator Ray Rhodes, the 'Skins still ranked 22nd against the run and released their primary run-stopper, Dana Stubblefield, for cap reasons.

Marco Coleman played better and cheaper than Bruce Smith, who still has some juice left at end. Coleman had 12 sacks, Smith 10. Defensive coordinator Kurt Schottenheimer, Marty's brother, would like to see Dan Wilkinson get into the kind of physical condition he has never experienced in order to tap his potential. Kenard Lang can play inside and out and becomes a key after N.D. Kalu signed with Philadelphia and Stubblefield left. Del Cowsette and veteran Nolan Harrison are also possibilities to step up.

The Redskins also lost solid, if unspectacular, middle linebacker Derek M. Smith to San Francisco and they aren't sure whether to insert Kevin Mitchell there or convert weakside linebacker Shawn Barber. Moving Barber would allow second-year man LaVar Arrington to play the weakside after struggling on the other side. Greg Jones could regain his spot on the strongside.

Deion who?

Darrell Green is 41 years old, one of the true physical phenomena in sport, and he wants his starting cornerback job back from Deion Sanders. There is no reason not to listen, especially with Sanders apparently more interested in baseball once again. Schottenheimer drafted mouthy Fred Smoot just in case. Champ Bailey is an emerging star at the other corner and Tyrone Drakeford is an experienced backup. Sam Shade and Mark Carrier are the safeties, with second-year men David Terrell and Josh Symonette behind them.

The Redskins figure everything would have turned out all right if they hadn't switched to four placekickers and wound up with 44-year-old Eddie Murray. They are begging for relief and hope to get it from Brett Conway. They hired Bryan Barker from Jacksonville to punt. Bailey can return punts, but Snyder is still looking for a replacement for the great Brian Mitchell. Canadian Winston October will get a look. ■

Emmitt stands alone, as Cowboys view upcoming season as holding pattern.

Now there is one. Emmitt Smith is the last of the triplets. Troy Aikman reluctantly followed Michael Irvin into retirement, leaving the Cowboys with only one leg to stand on.

Two, actually. You still have to look hard to see signs of Smith slowing down at age 32. He's only 103 yards behind Barry Sanders now and only 1,560 behind all-time leading rusher Walter Payton.

Raghib Ismail hopes to bounce back from a disappointing season that produced only 25 catches.

"I told Emmitt I'd give anything to be on that field when he breaks Walter Payton's record," Aikman said in a tearful farewell.

Smith's quest is liable to take him into the 2002 season, but that is what owner Jerry Jones is pointing toward anyway. Jones admitted to fans that he is so strapped under the constraints of the salary cap that this season constitutes a holding pattern.

Short-term answers on offense

To step in for Aikman at quarterback, the Cowboys signed St. Louis and Baltimore castoff Tony Banks to a one-year contract at a minimum $500,000 salary. To take up some slack at receiver, they signed Cincinnati and Tennessee castoff Carl Pickens, again for only one year. The idea is to get through 2001 and regroup.

Without Aikman, Jones will see how the other half lives for the first time. When he bought the Cowboys, Jones had the No. 1 draft pick fall into his lap. Three Super Bowls and 12 seasons later, the Cowboys will discover just how rare franchise quarterbacks are. Behind Banks, the Cowboys have untested Anthony Wright and Clint Stoerner and made Georgia's Quincy Carter their top draft choice in the second round.

Long-ball threat real

If there is hope for this season, it is in Banks' ability to throw the long ball. The Cowboys traded for speedster Joey Galloway from Seattle last year, giving up two first-round draft choices only to see Galloway suffer a torn ACL in his left knee on opening day. Since it often requires a full year of recovery, there is no guarantee Galloway will be able to regain full strength and speed by the start of this season. Raghib Ismail is the other deep threat coach Dave Campo hopes Banks can exploit. He caught only 25 balls last year.

Last year's leading receiver, James McKnight, was signed by Miami, leaving Wane McGarity, Jason Tucker and Damon Hodge as reserves. The Cowboys hope free agent Pickens can regain form. Tight end Jackie Harris is coming off a productive year as the leading touchdown receiver with five. David LaFleur is the blocking tight end.

Emmitt Smith now has his eyes on history and gaining the 1,561 yards it will take to break Walter Payton's career rushing mark.

The Cowboys managed to keep blocking fullback Robert Thomas for Smith. Backups are second-year players Troy Hambrick and Michael Wiley and XFL signee John Avery.

knee injury. Ben Fricke and Craig Page are backup centers.

Nobody was worse against the run than the Cowboys, so Campo knows his work is cut out for him on defense. Stopping the run is the first order of business for any defense, and the Cowboys simply couldn't do it. The Cowboys used six draft picks on defense, four on the defensive line, and every one of them will get a chance to contribute.

End Greg Ellis is the only certain starter on the front four. Campo hopes a tackle rotation of Brandon Noble, Michael Myers and Dimitrius Underwood is adequate, but draft picks Willie Blade, Daleroy Stewart and John Nix all will get looks inside. Leon Lett signed in Denver and the Cowboys are so desperate they may invite Chad Hennings back after serious neck surgery. Ebenezer Ekuban, a sack specialist who led the team with a modest 6 1/2 take-downs, will vie for playing time at end, but the Cowboys have the "help wanted" signs out. Peppi Zellner is coming off knee surgery.

Dexter returns to laboratory

Re-signing linebacker Dexter Coakley was a needed step toward solidifying the defense. The Cowboys couldn't imagine what they might look like without him. He and Darren Hambrick led the team in tackles. Middle linebacker Dat Nguyen is undersized and better in coverage. Orantes Grant, Joe Bowden and Barron Wortham lend some depth.

Darren Woodson returns as the glue of the secondary at strong safety after missing the last five games with a broken arm. Campo hopes George Teague or Izell Reese can stay healthy at the free safety spot. Cornerback Ryan McNeil went to San Diego, leaving the starting corner jobs up to Kareem Larrimore, Charlie Williams, Mario Edwards and Duane Hawthorne. Dwayne Goodrich and Earl Riley are backups at safety.

Punter Micah Knorr and kicker Tim Seder were the league's only pair of rookie kickers, indicating the Cowboy commitment to youth. Backup wideouts Tucker and McGarity return kicks and punts, respectively, although Campo would just as soon see them emerge as valuable receivers more than specialists.

The offseason moves to re-sign linebacker Dexter Coakley (left) and bring in strong-armed free agent Tony Banks at quarterback may give the Cowboys a chance to be competitive this year.

The inconsistent Jake Plummer (top) will have no shortage of weapons this season. One of them, third-year receiver David Boston, came into his own in 2000, producing four 100-yard receiving games and 71 receptions.

With limited supplies, McGinnis will try his hand at getting the sun to rise again for Arizona.

Only two years after a playoff breakthrough, the Cardinals are again a team of broken promise. As if a half-century of playoff frustration wasn't punishment enough, Cardinal fans were teased for an instant in 1998 and then rudely jerked back to earth. A future that looked bright with a young quarterback and young defensive line suddenly looks bleak.

Offense by Jake

The young quarterback, Jake Plummer, remains a work in progress. The young defensive line disappeared like a mirage in the Arizona desert—Simeon Rice, Eric Swann and Mark Smith all gone—with Andre Wadsworth limping toward an uncertain career.

Coach Vince Tobin was fired and replaced by defensive coordinator Dave McGinnis last season, who was named "permanent" coach despite a 1-8 finish as the head man. Injuries decimated the team, with starters missing a total of 109 games. The biggest victory for owner Bill Bidwill's franchise was a vote that paved the way for a new stadium, as big an upset as the NFL could boast all last season.

McGinnis is making changes as fast as time and money will allow, but there are so many holes in his defense that the Cardinals' best chance for respectability anytime soon is to outscore teams—not an easy task for a team that finished last in the NFC in scoring.

McGinnis switched offensive coordinators, adding Rich Olson from the Washington Redskins to tutor Plummer and bringing back quarterback coach Geep Chryst from the San Diego Chargers. Chryst coached Plummer in his first two seasons, when his passer rating was higher than it has been in his last two.

Moore's return boosts passing game

One of the most costly injuries last season was to receiver Rob Moore, whose return will bolster Plummer's cast of weapons. David Boston, Frank Sanders and a healthy Moore give the Cards potentially one of the league's best pass-catching trios. Young kick returner MarTay Jenkins also showed promise. The tight end is Terry Hardy.

Running back Michael Pittman was Plummer's leading receiver as well as the team's leading rusher. The Cardinals hope he doesn't have to do such double-duty again. Second-year running back Thomas Jones, the team's No. 1 draft choice of a year ago, must take over and prove his worth after a frustrating rookie season that ended with a bout of pneumonia and pleurisy. Joel Makovicka is the blocking back.

McGinnis is a defensive coach, but he has put his 2001 eggs in the offensive basket. The drafting of mammoth offensive tackle Leonard Davis will give Plummer one of the biggest lines in NFL history. The 6-6, 370-pound Davis played left tackle at Texas and, if he can make the transition, former No. 1 pick L.J. Shelton could move to right guard opposite free-agent pickup left guard Pete Kendall from Seattle. Otherwise, the 6-6, 360-pound Shelton will stay at left tackle and Davis will play right guard beside 6-8, 350-pound right tackle Anthony Clement. Kendall is a mere 292 and center Mike Gruttadauria is a tiny 286. Gruttadauria was hurt most of last season and Chris Dishman filled in.

Life after Aeneas

On defense, the Cardinals have practically abdicated, trading their top player, Pro Bowl cornerback Aeneas Williams, to St. Louis during the draft. After Davis, the

With Wadsworth's availability and football future still very much in doubt after surgeries on both knees, the Cardinals have to start from scratch on the defensive line. Brad Ottis filled in for Wadsworth last year. Jabari Issa will compete for the starting spot. Corey Sears and Thomas Burke also return. Inside, the Cards will make do with Russell Davis, Mao Tosi, Barron Tanner and Rashod Swinger.

Six-year veteran Frank Sanders is one of the NFC's best at making clutch third-down receptions.

Middle linebacker Ron McKinnon was the only member of the front seven who started every game and he returns as the focal point of the unit. Rob Fredrickson and Raynoch Thompson are the outside backers. James Folston and Johnny Rutledge are in reserve.

Replacing Williams will be next to impossible. He played 169 straight games for the Cardinals, the longest streak in team history for a player other than kicker, and his 46 interceptions came within six of Larry Wilson's team record. Corey Chavous and Tom Knight will have to step up. Stone will get a starting look, as will David Barrett and Coby Rhinehart. All applications accepted.

Safeties Pat Tillman and Kwamie Lassiter both started every game last season. If Chavous doesn't have to play corner, he is a candidate to push for a job inside.

McGinnis used a fourth-round pick to draft placekicker Bill Gramatica, emphasizing his hope that the Cardinals can score. Pro Bowler Scott Player is the punter. Jenkins returns kicks and sixth-round draft choice Bobby Newcombe should replace Mac Cody as the punt returner.

Buccaneers should get the better of a four-team race.

By Don Pierson, Chicago Tribune

The Chicago Bears are the only team that can't win this division and the only team that hasn't won it since 1990. After four straight years in last place, the Bears have become the old Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Nobody picked the Minnesota Vikings last year, either, but this is a four-team race with the Bucs the favorites because of defense.

Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Brad Johnson joins Keyshawn Johnson on offense and Simeon Rice joins Warren Sapp on defense. If the Bucs still don't have all the pieces in place, they will be very surprised and disappointed. So confident are the Bucs of their team chemistry that they didn't hesitate to take a chance on disruptive Ryan Leaf. After watching Trent Dilfer become the fourth ex-Tampa Bay quarterback to get to a Super Bowl, the Bucs are getting anxious.

Sapp dropped nearly 30 pounds and plans to perform at a relatively lean 300 pounds, which means he will be hungry. Shaun King is in better shape, too, after losing his job, so if Johnson falters, he's ready.

Green Bay Packers

After winning their final four games last year and barely missing the playoffs, the Packers are feeling momentum. Quarterback Brett Favre is happy to have Dorsey Levens back healthy. Even fat nose tackle Gilbert Brown slimmed down enough to make a comeback after a year eating cheeseburgers.

Coach Mike Sherman replaces retired Ron Wolf as general manager to do what Mike Holmgren wanted to do: coach and manage at the same time. As long as he has Favre, he has a chance to succeed. But Favre needs receivers, so this season depends a lot on whether Antonio Freeman can either rebound or be replaced.

Detroit Lions

Matt Millen jumped from the television booth to the front office and immediately hired another offensive coordinator from the San Francisco 49ers, Marty Mornhinweg, to coach the Lions. Under Bobby Ross and interim coach Gary Moeller, the Lions underachieved. They are better than average on offense and defense, but a lot still depends on the health and progress of quarterback Charlie Batch. The Lions looked into obtaining Jacksonville quarterback Mark Brunell, but will give Batch another chance.

The word in Lions' camp is no more country club atmosphere. Something has been missing and this team is going to be in shape to find it.

Minnesota Vikings

Dean of coaches Dennis Green loves being an underdog. His Vikings thrive when the experts discount them. They won the division last year with inexperienced quarterback Daunte Culpepper, faltering only after they were favored to win the NFC. Now they have lost former All-Pro John Randle, Robert Smith and Todd Steussie, plus starting linebacker Dwayne Rudd. In addition, star Randy Moss has publicly expressed doubts the Vikings can ever get to a Super Bowl. Perfect.

Green insists they will be better than last year's division title team. It's hard to see how, but Green sees things other coaches can't.

Chicago Bears

The only team in the division without a starting quarterback in mind, the Bears have won only 11 games in coach Dick Jauron's two seasons. Jauron knows his job is in jeopardy as he decides among quarterbacks Cade McNown, Jim Miller and Shane Matthews. He would rather rely on defense, where middle linebacker Brian Urlacher was Rookie of the Year and is following in the footsteps of Bill George, Dick Butkus and Mike Singletary.

So uncertain are the Bears of their quarterback situation, they even added journeyman Billy Joe Tolliver. He has more starting experience than all the others combined, a scary thought for Bear fans.

TAMPA BAY BUCCANEERS

With Johnson, Rice added to already-potent mix, future is now in Tampa Bay.

Convinced they are oh so close to a Super Bowl, the Buccaneers did two unusual things on draft day: They selected an offensive tackle and they traded up to do it.

Once in need of help everywhere they looked, the Bucs are now cherry-picking in search of that one final piece that will put them over the top.

When they got within five points of the Super Bowl two years ago, they gave young quarterback Shaun King a chance to develop. When they failed to score a touchdown in the playoffs last year against Philadelphia, they signed free-agent quarterback Brad Johnson. There is no time to wait for King.

The Bucs have runners, receivers, blockers and defense. They have size, speed, youth, toughness—everything a team could want for a Super Bowl run. They even have an outstanding kicker, although Martin Gramatica's miss in Green Bay in the final game of the season cost the Bucs a home playoff game.

They have everything except time, because if they don't get it done soon, they will begin to doubt their coaches, their teammates, themselves. Then they will have to start over. It is only human nature and it is only a matter of time.

Coach Tony Dungy, as steady as they come, has changed offensive coordinators for the second time in two years, elevating Clyde Christensen to a job held for only one season by Les Steckel. Johnson is expected to give the Bucs more consistency, even though he finished a tad below King in passer rating while playing in Washington. King also had a much better touchdown-to-interception ratio than Johnson, but Johnson is a more accurate passer overall with more experience.

Can Leaf change colors?

If all else fails, the Bucs have a reformed Ryan Leaf on their bench after his disaster in San Diego mercifully ended. As a waiver pickup rather than a No. 1 draft choice, Leaf is expected to approach his job with more urgency. For pure talent, he's ahead of Johnson or King, which means nothing.

Getting the ball to receiver Keyshawn Johnson and tailback Warrick Dunn with more frequency is the goal. Each scored eight touchdowns last season, but both should be in double-digit territory when it comes to scoring. Johnson should be acclimated to his new surroundings after a bumpy landing from the Jets. "Johnson-to-Johnson" should cure what ails the Bucs the way Johnson & Johnson Band-Aids fix cuts and scrapes.

Only 26, Warrick Dunn's 3,753 career rushing yards already rank second in Buccaneer history.

Jacquez Green caught 51 passes last season but only one for a touchdown, so the Bucs need to develop more weapons to complement Johnson. If Reidel Anthony or Karl Williams aren't the answer, Dunn's role will expand further. Dunn clearly took over the No. 1 rushing job from Mike Alstott last year, relegating Alstott to an important, but supportive, role. The Bucs plan to use more two-back sets and H-back Dave Moore remains valuable as a tight end.

The Bucs hope they filled a hole at left tackle by making Florida's Kenyatta Walker their top pick. They hadn't selected an offensive lineman No. 1 in 10 years and are usually reluctant to give up two picks for one, but they believe Walker is one of the best offensive left tackle prospects they have ever graded. He will step into a spot held last year by Pete Pierson and George Hegamin, who now provide experienced backup help for Walker and right tackle Jerry Wunsch. With Randall McDaniel still going strong at 36, the Bucs plan to move young Cosey Coleman into departed Frank Middleton's spot at right

Rice spices up defensive stew

The signing of high-priced free agent Simeon Rice hopefully gives Dungy the edge rusher he has sought to complement the strong inside push of tackles Warren Sapp and Anthony McFarland. Although Rice has gained a reputation for ignoring the run, the Bucs were satisfied enough to release left defensive end Chidi Ahanotu and move right end Marcus Jones to the left side to make room for Rice full-time. John McLaughlin could help Rice at end.

Stopping the run is the work of linebacker Derrick Brooks and friends. Nobody tackles better than Brooks, who flies to the ball along with middle linebacker Jamie Duncan and outside backer Shelton Quarles. The Bucs are going to give Nate Webster a chance to see if he can push Duncan out of a starting job.

Retaining cornerback Ronde Barber keeps the Bucs solid in the secondary. Barber and Donnie Abraham form a good Momentum carry-over from 2000, a little luck and a lot of Favre could get Pack back to playoffs.

Down the stretch last season, the Packers beat all four of their NFC Central Division rivals to finish a respectable 9-7 and give themselves a solid dose of confidence entering 2001. If momentum carries over, the Packers have their share of it. According to quarterback Brett Favre, the last four games convinced him the team could become a surprise in the NFC this year.

With Favre, nobody should be surprised. The Packers always will be dangerous so long as the quarterback keeps his uncanny playing streak going in his 10th season as a starter. General Manager Ron Wolf, who brought him to Green Bay in a trade with Atlanta, retired in the offseason with one regret: He said he should have surrounded Favre with better offensive weapons.

Injury robbed the Packers of key offensive component Dorsey Levens last season, and wide receiver Antonio Freeman looks like he's on the down side of his career. Rookie tight end Bubba Franks wasn't ready to take over for Mark Chmura, who was released by the club before his highly publicized trial and acquittal for sexual assault.

How Favre can he take them?

Still, Favre was able to rebound from a subpar 2000 season under coach Ray Rhodes and hang in until the satisfying finish. His 20 touchdown passes were a seven-year low, but he cut down on interceptions and demonstrated his usual leadership. His remarkable starting streak, now at 141 games, is more like a place-kicker than a quarterback. His durability is more important than ever this season because the Packers traded promising backup Matt Hasselbeck to Seattle, just as they did Aaron Brooks to New Orleans the previous year.

They re-signed Doug Pederson and convinced CFL quarterback Henry Burris (Saskatchewan) to take a shot at the NFL, but nobody in Packerland kids himself. The Packers go as Favre goes.

Adding help is crucial in coach Mike Sherman's second season. The Packers think the healthy return of Levens will go a long way. While speedy backup Ahman Green improved steadily into a legitimate NFL back, Levens provides more in the passing game and is a key to everything the Packers like to do on offense. The Packers hope a one-two punch of Green and Levens can give them what Levens and Edgar Bennett provided in 1996, when the Packers coincidentally won the Super Bowl. William Henderson returns as a solid fullback.

Wanted: Breakthrough receiver

Receiver is a major concern because Freeman has not matched his 1998 performance and has shown a penchant for off-field trouble. Wolf always has been good at finding receivers in the second and third rounds, like Freeman and Robert Brooks, so there are high expectations of second-round pick Robert Ferguson from Texas A&M. There is also hope that young prospects like Donald Driver, Charles Lee, Corey Bradford and Anthony Lucas can step out of nowhere and push Bill Schroeder and Freeman for playing time.

Franks caught 34 passes for only one touchdown—not enough in the Packer offense—so he is expected to make significant strides between his first and second seasons. Tyrone Davis is a receiving threat at tight end, too, if he loses weight.

The offensive line will change after the loss of left guard Ross Verba to Cleveland. His departure was expected, but the spot has not been filled. The plan is to let second-year tackle Mark Tauscher have a shot, provided right tackle Earl Dotson recovers from back Quarterback Brett Favre is expecting the return of a healthy Dorsey Levens (bottom) to open things up for the Packer offense this season.

The Packers also re-signed nose tackle Gilbert Brown, who ate himself out of the league in 2000 but can still hold his own as a run-stuffer. Santana Dotson is coming off a quadriceps injury and so is second-year prospect Steve Warren—the Packers need all the help they can get inside. adds depth. Vonnie Holliday and Cletidus Hunt are the left ends, with Thierry, David Bowens and Kabeer Gbaja-Biamila on the other side.

Nate Wayne replaced injured and departed Brian Williams at linebacker. With Bernardo Harris and second-year starter Na'il Diggs, the Packers remain thin at linebacker, so the addition of third-rounder Torrance Marshall of Oklahoma was vital.

Safety Darren Sharper had a breakthrough season and led the league in interceptions, giving the Packers a solid middle with veteran LeRoy Butler. Scott McGarrahan is a backup. Wolf added Penn State cornerback Bhawoh Jue in the draft's third round to join holdovers Antuan Edwards and Tod McBride behind starters Mike McKenzie and Tyrone Williams.

Re-signing placekicker Ryan Longwell was a good move. Punter Josh Bidwell will get training-camp competition. Allen Rossum is one of the better combination kickoff and punt return men.

Darren Sharper, who had nine interceptions last year, and LeRoy Butler (right) give the Packers one of the best safety duos in the NFL.

New sheriff in Motown, Matt Millen, has his hands full as a rookie CEO.

There is a new attitude in Detroit this year. At least that's what new boss Matt Millen is demanding. If he doesn't see it by midseason, the former middle linebacker and television commentator-turned-executive might end up in the huddle. He saw how teams got to Super Bowls while playing for the Raiders, 49ers and Redskins, experience enough for the Ford family to hire him.

Mornhinweg in Mid-America

New coach Marty Mornhinweg arrived from the San Francisco 49ers with new ideas and the hope of installing a new offense.

Unlike the stereotypical West Coast style, there will be very little finesse involved.

The Lions have the look of a power-running team with James Stewart operating behind a gigantic line.

The Lions' biggest question mark remains the health and development of quarterback Charlie Batch, who has yet to shake the injury jinx after his third pro season.

So concerned were the Lions about the future of Batch that they actively inquired about the availability of Jacksonville quarterback Mark Brunell during the offseason.

The Lions are perennial door-knockers, always on the threshold and never able to take the final step. In Millen's mind, it's time to break the door down. If Batch can't get it done, the Lions will continue their pursuit of a quarterback who can. They drafted interesting Rutgers prospect Mike McMahon in the fifth round. Mornhinweg is given credit for turning undrafted Canadian Leaguer Jeff Garcia into one of the league's top passers in San Francisco. Veteran Jim Harbaugh also was added to speed the development of Batch and play in an emergency. In three seasons now, Batch has failed to finish and there are questions about whether his body can take much more punishment.

Spurned by Barry—again

Millen and Mornhinweg knocked on running back Barry Sanders' door to see if he wanted to return and got another "no" for an answer. But the door remains open. Stewart gained 1,184 yards in his first season as Sanders' replacement. While that was credible, Stewart's 3.5-yard average was the lowest among all 1,000-yard rushers last season—not that he was ever going to make Detroit fans forget Sanders with his breakaway ability. Mario Bates is useful in short yardage. Sedrick Irvin, Reuben Droughns and Lamont Warren lend depth. Droughns missed his rookie season with a shoulder injury. Cory Schlesinger is a solid blocking fullback.

Fourth-year man Charlie Batch is now entrenched as the Lion QB, starting 15 games last season.

The Lions want to get more from receivers Germane Crowell, Johnnie Morton and Herman Moore, so they brought in Jerry Rice for a talk about future employment. Moore could become a salary-cap casualty, and young Larry Foster affords the best depth. Tight end David Sloan could become a more valuable weapon in James Stewart proved to be an adequate free-agent replacement for the retired Barry Sanders, rushing for a career-high 1,184 yards and 10 TDs.

Mornhinweg's offense, which added pass-catching tight end Pete Mitchell. Morton, Crowell and Moore scored only three touchdowns apiece last season—not enough. Crowell missed most of the season with a broken foot. Draft choice Scotty Anderson from Grambling is another tall prospect in the mold of Moore and Crowell. Brian Stablein is a reliable backup.

After losing guard Jeff Hartings to Pittsburgh in free agency, the Lions believe they won't skip a beat after drafting Michigan's Jeff Backus and Nebraska's Dominic Raiola in the first two rounds. Backus is expected to start at left tackle with second-year man Stockar McDougle moving to right tackle and right tackle Aaron Gibson shifting to left guard. McDougle weighs 350 and Gibson is 380, but both could slim down as the Lions strive for a tougher image. Gibson has fought shoulder injuries. Brendan Stai was signed from Jacksonville to take Hartings' spot at right guard. Raiola will push Eric Beverly to start at center. Kerlin Blaise and Andy Vincent are backups.

Defensive end Robert Porcher has vowed to rebound from a subpar season of eight sacks following an unhappy contract experience. His value as a leader and player to new defensive coordinator Vince Tobin cannot be overstated. With a rejuvenated Porcher, tackles Luther Elliss and James Jones and end Tracy Scroggins, the Lions have a very good front four. Jared DeVries and James Hall both could push Scroggins. first-round talent who should help as soon as he's healthy. Kelvin Pritchett also is an experienced inside player.

Linebacker one of few strengths

Stephen Boyd is one of the league's best middle linebackers. Flanked by Allen Aldridge and Chris Claiborne, Boyd directs a solid group that includes veteran backup Scott Kowalkowski and second-year prospect Barrett Green. Like Moore, the Lions want Aldridge to restructure his contract.

The secondary is a concern because of the Achilles injury to cornerback Bryant Westbrook, who was enjoying an outstanding season until sidelined last year. The addition of Rams veteran Todd Lyght will help. Terry Fair starts at right corner. Kurt Schulz and Ron Rice are the safeties. The retirements of Corwin Brown and Kevin Abrams hurt the secondary depth, where Kywin Supernaw and Lamar Campbell lead the prospects.

Punter John Jett and placekicker Jason Hanson are solid. Desmond Howard is back as an excellent return specialist.

Doubts, retirements, defections? It's business as usual for the Vikings' Dennis Green.

One thing the dean of NFL coaches, Dennis Green, is not afraid to do is throw young players into the fire. Nonplussed by free-agent defections or the sudden retirement of top running back Robert Smith, Green claims he is prepared again to contend for a Super Bowl that has eluded him despite eight playoff appearances in nine years.

The Vikings were blown out 41-0 in the NFC title game by the New York Giants, after which star receiver Randy Moss expressed doubts the Vikings would ever take the final step. Green agreed everybody was disappointed and Moss would rebound along with everybody else.

As usual, the Vikings will have a new look after losing the NFC's leading rusher plus former Pro Bowl linemen Todd Steussie on offense and John Randle on defense. The Vikings also will be playing without outstanding linebacker Dwayne Rudd, another free-agent loss.

But Green is nothing if not eternally optimistic, saying, "There is no doubt we will be better overall. We'll be better defensively, bigger, and that will help us overall."

That Wisconsin running back Michael Bennett fell into his lap in the draft did wonders for Green's optimism. The fastest back and one of the fastest players in the entire draft, Bennett arrives with much the same credentials and style that Smith arrived in with 1993: a track sprinter who can go the distance on any play. Bennett played only one season at Wisconsin as the replacement for Heisman Trophy winner Ron Dayne, but the Vikings' offense—spread with potent receivers—is tailor-made for him.

Undaunted Daunte

Green will be no more hesitant to insert Bennett into his lineup than he was relying on quarterback Daunte Culpepper as an untested second-year starter. Culpepper disappointed no one, especially receivers Moss and Cris

Carter, as he became the most dangerous passer/runner the Vikings have played at quarterback since Fran Tarkenton.

With Culpepper in only his second season as a starter, the Vikings expect significant improvement in an offense that finished fifth overall, sixth in running and seventh in passing among all NFL teams.

Green was going to insert backups Doug Chapman and Moe Williams into Smith's tailback slot before getting Bennett. Now, he believes he has quality depth plus bruising fullback Jim Kleinsasser. At quarterback, he lost veteran Bubby Brister, but has confidence in young Todd Bouman as a backup.

Receiver reunion

Moss and Carter welcome the return of Jake Reed as the third receiver. Reed spent last season in New Orleans and the Vikings weren't able to play their usual three-receiver offense as effectively. The addition of tight end Byron Chamberlain from Denver also gives Culpepper a big target in the middle of the field. Andrew Jordan backs him up.

The rapid development of center Matt Birk vindicated the Vikings in their loss of former Pro Bowl blockers Jeff Christy and Randall McDaniel to Tampa Bay. Birk now anchors the line and is one of the league's best centers, getting to the Pro Bowl in his first season as a starter.

Defense to miss R&R

The defense needs fixing and lost one of the league's best players of the '90s in Randle, who signed with Seattle. He had lost his effectiveness in recent years because the Vikings had him playing out of position at end. The addition of pass rusher Lance Johnstone from Oakland could give the Vikings their best edge rusher since Chris Doleman if Johnstone can shake the injuries that slowed him in Oakland. Talance Sawyer will try left end to make room for Johnstone, with Fernando Smith starting at tackle and able to swing inside and outside. The addition of Stanford's Willie Howard also provides some versatility. Howard, a second-rounder, will get a chance to start. Second-year prospect Michael Boireau also will get a look. Inside, second-year tackle Chris Hovan is solid. Draft choice Shawn Worthen and second-year man Fred Robbins need to help in a hurry.

Safety Robert Griffith made his first trip to the Pro Bowl last season, his seventh, and registered his fifth consecutive 100-tackle season.

Replacing Rudd won't be easy. The Vikings hope veteran Gabe Northern is up to the task. Craig Sauer is iffy after missing most of last season with a foot injury. Lemanski Hall is back. Kailee Wong emerged strong at middle linebacker and Ed McDaniel holds down the weak side.

Cornerback is still a question mark for a secondary that got torched by the Giants in the NFC title game. Third-rounder Eric Kelly will immediately be thrust into a mix that includes Robert Tate, Kenny Wright and Wasswa Servanga. Help from a veteran such as Dale Carter is a priority before training camp. Safeties Orlando Thomas and Robert Griffith give coordinator Emmitt Thomas few worries inside, with promising young Tyrone Carter in reserve.

Punter Mitch Berger and ancient placekicker Gary Anderson give the Vikings reliable kicking. Anderson rebounded from an off-year in 2000 and missed only one field goal last year, although his range is a concern at age 42. Troy Walters and backup running back Williams return kicks.

It's quickly becoming Brian Urlacher against the world in Chicago, where Dick Jauron sits atop the hot seat.

The Bears led the league in only one category last season: injured reserve. They finished the year with 15 players, including eight starters, on the list. But they have a bigger problem than injury. Even when healthy, the Bears have not convinced themselves they can compete.

In coach Dick Jauron's third season, the Bears are searching for a quarterback, wishing for a pass rusher and hoping two rookies can help them score points. They have one great player, second-year middle linebacker Brian Urlacher, who already is drawing comparisons to Hall-of-Famer Dick Butkus. Unfortunately, one of the most haunting parallels is that Butkus toiled for years on a losing team.

Since their glory days in the 1980s, the Bears have spent top draft picks on Rashaan Salaam and Curtis Enis to try to replace Walter Payton and Neal Anderson. They have searched for a quarterback to replace Jim McMahon. They have yet to get lucky with an eighth-round pass rusher like Richard Dent.

Cade's fade

Cade McNown, No. 1 pick in 1999, was their choice over Minnesota's Daunte Culpepper at quarterback. Now McNown finds himself in a three-way battle to start with journeymen Jim Miller and Shane Matthews. When he was drafted among the elite class of quarterbacks, McNown was widely heralded as the prospect most ready to step in and run a pro offense. He failed in the demanding system of former offensive coordinator Gary Crowton, who went back to college as head coach at BYU. Under new coordinator John Shoop, the Bears promise to rely more on a running game and less on route adjustments read on the fly by receivers and quarterbacks.

Jauron admitted he pushed McNown into a starting role too quickly last season. It backfired on the field and in the locker room, where teammates believed Miller gave them a better chance to win. Billy Joe Tolliver will vie for a roster spot.

Receiving corps shows promise

The Bears scored a woeful 216 points and finished last in production inside the 20-yard line. Top draft choice David Terrell from Michigan is supposed to provide a big target in the red zone. He will need help. Marcus Robinson, a similar big target and deep threat, is coming off a back injury and is vital to Terrell's development. Likewise, Bobby Engram missed most of last season with a knee injury that leaves him questionable. Eddie Kennison signed in Denver and Marty Booker, Macey Brooks, D'Wayne Bates and Dez White have yet to reveal their potential. At tight end, the Bears have hopes for former Eagle and Packer Kaseem Sinceno and ex-Jet Fred Baxter. Former linebacker Dustin Lyman also is trying to help at tight end.

James Allen rushed for 1,120 yards but scored only two touchdowns and doesn't scare defenses. Second-round pick Anthony Thomas is a power back who scored 55 touchdowns at Michigan. The Bears will give second-year man Marlon Barnes a chance to play and hope to line up in more two-back sets with fullback Scott Dragos.

The Bears are set at tackles with Blake Brockermeier and James "Big Cat" Williams and at right guard with Chris Villarrial. Center Olin Kreutz is coming off injury. Left guard Todd Perry signed in Miami and will be replaced either by young

To protect Urlacher and allow him freedom to race to the football the way Ray Lewis does in Baltimore, the Bears signed two big tackles in Ted Washington of Buffalo and Keith Traylor of Denver. With them playing inside ends Phillip Daniels and Bryan Robinson, the Bears believe they are solid against the run, but they want a pass rusher to emerge so they can move Robinson inside on passing downs. Fourth-round draft pick Karon Riley of Minnesota will get a shot along with holdover Roosevelt Colvin.

Urlacher's early returns

Urlacher proved a natural at middle linebacker after making the switch from college safety to strongside linebacker at first. He plays between Sean Harris and Warrick Holdman.

The Bears must improve on a passing offense that finished 23rd in the NFL. Below, wide receivers Bobby Engram (left) and Marcus Robinson.

James Allen came out of nowhere in his third year to lead the Bears in rushing with 1,120 yards.

with Khari Samuel and Colvin backing up. Few linebackers this side of Baltimore's Lewis cover from sideline to sideline as well as Urlacher, who not only led the team in tackles but also found time to record a team-leading eight sacks. He tossed in two interceptions for good measure—all this while starting only the last 14 games without any experience of a training camp at middle linebacker.

In the secondary, the Bears solidified a shaky situation at cornerback by re-signing Walt Harris. Thomas Smith holds down the other spot and Jaaron expects converted running back Jerry Azumah to continue his development. Ex-49er top draft pick R.W. McQuarters played well late in the season when Reggie Austin was hurt as a rookie. At safety, second-year man Mike Brown was only a shade behind Urlacher in terms of rookie impact. Tony Parrish is a hard-hitting strong safety. Shawn Wooden and special-teams ace Frankie Smith back up.

The Bears' first free-agent signing was Giants punter Brad Maynard. The hope is he can boot the offense out of trouble and negotiate the tricky winds in Soldier Field. Placekicker Paul Edinger was very good as a rookie. Glyn Milburn is a dangerous punt and kickoff return man.

Division of very little defense looks for another worst-to-first scenario.

By Don Pierson, Chicago Tribune

This is the "Worst-to-First" division. New Orleans made the jump last year, St. Louis the year before. Atlanta was fifth last year and isn't too far removed from its 14-2 title following a 7-9 season.

The bad news for the rest of the division is the San Francisco 49ers have been down two years in a row and haven't won the division title since 1995. Amazingly, the Saints, Rams, Falcons and Panthers all have won it since the 49ers last dominated. In San Francisco, they think it's their turn again.

St. Louis Rams

Coach Mike Martz, who thinks defense is something to toy with on a blackboard, nevertheless acknowledged that the other half of his team needed restructure. So hiring Tampa Bay linebackers coach Lovie Smith was the most important move in the Rams' quest to return to a Super Bowl.

Martz doesn't want his fancy passing to appear like a passing fancy, but defense is his best hope to give Kurt Warner and Marshall Faulk a chance. It's a gamble, but Martz figures no defense could be much worst than the one that gave up 29 points a game last season. He got rid of unhappy defensive end Kevin Carter and added a whole new cast of characters with the salary-cap space that created.

New Orleans Saints

With the eighth-ranked defense, the Saints were the only team in the division with a defense worth noting. The other four were all floundering among the bottom nine. If defense still means anything in 2001, the chasers have considerable ground to make up on the surprising Saints.

Coach Jim Haslett's problem is not defense, but whether to play Jeff Blake or Aaron Brooks at quarterback. Either one would like to hand off to Ricky Williams if Williams is willing. If not, Haslett may have come up with the steal of the draft in versatile Deuce McAllister.

San Francisco 49ers

You can't keep a good organization down for long, and with Bill Walsh completing his final offseason and draft and coach Steve Mariucci still around to coach, the 49ers still resemble a pretty good organization. They surprised everybody but themselves with the emergence of quarterback Jeff Garcia.

If their rebuilding defense is anywhere near ready to compete, watch out above. The 49ers will be back before their rivals know it. Walsh is on his way out, but he has not left this team in shambles.

Carolina Panthers

George Seifert was once the coach with the best winning percentage in history. That was before his sojourn east from San Francisco. He tried to assemble a cast of older veterans last year to make a run. This year, he's headed in another direction, although cutting quarterback Steve Beuerlein was one of the most puzzling moves of the offseason. Seifert once got rid of Joe Montana, but that was to make room for Steve Young. There is no Young in sight here. Instead, there is Heisman Trophy winner Chris Weinke, oldest quarterback on the roster. If he's also the best, he will start, which means it's a rebuilding year.

Atlanta Falcons

Dan Reeves has seen better days, like the time he traded for rookie quarterback John Elway long ago. Trading for exciting Michael Vick was the perfect tonic for Falcon fans, who were beginning to think the 1998 Super Bowl season was a mirage.

Reeves is still relying on quarterback Chris Chandler and running back Jamal Anderson. The question is whether either will ever be the same. A more pressing problem, however, is on defense, where the Falcons ranked 25th and showed very little interest in stopping the run. Maybe Mr. Vick can play safety while awaiting his shot at quarterback.

DEFENSE:

NEWCOMER:

Offense is still primo, but Martz never met a defense he couldn't try to overhaul—so hang on.

Mike Martz likes to strike quickly. On offense, he loves big plays. On defense, he saw too many big plays against his Rams last season, so he wasted no time this offseason trying to fix it. Some coaches think rebuilding is a process; Martz treats it like an event. He fired three defensive assistants and most of his defensive starters.

"We were very complicated on defense last season," Martz says. "The players lost confidence in what we were doing. I also think there was a core of players defensively that were starters, about four or five guys, that did not prepare to play that season like they had done in past years."

If Martz weren't a coach, he'd make a good demolition engineer. He sent six defensive starters packing and targeted more after hiring Lovie Smith from Tampa Bay to replace Peter Giunta as coordinator. Smith will install the same "Cover 2" zone defense that held the Rams to 11 points in the 1999 NFC title game win over the Bucs.

When skeptics question Martz's madness, he refers them to the 1999 offseason when he was brought in from Washington and revamped the entire offense before their Super Bowl.

"We went from 27th to first (in total offense)," Martz recalls. "We changed eight starters, and we changed the offensive staff."

On offense, they nearly matched their 1999 season despite injuries to Kurt Warner and Marshall Faulk. Had the defense not yielded 29.4 points a game, the Rams believe they would have repeated.

Warner suffered a broken pinky finger on his right hand and concussions that lingered into the offseason, so Martz was reluctant to part with backup quarterback Trent Green, finally sending him to Kansas City for one of three No. 1 draft choices. Joe Germaine shows promise as a backup, but remains inexperienced.

A broken finger and concussions contributed to Kurt Warner's interception rate doubling to 5.2 percent last year.

With 2,189 total yards last season, Marshall Faulk joined Jim Brown to become the second player in NFL history to record three consecutive seasons of at least 2,000 total yards.

Offense = Marshall Plan

Faulk is the focal point of the offense. The past two years, he has been nothing short of the best player in football. Only 28, Faulk is in his prime, performing in the perfect system to exploit his nonpareil running/receiving skill. Martz hopes last year's injured rookie, Trung Canidate, can spell Faulk more this season, but the Rams will not advance further than Faulk can take them. Fullback Robert Holcombe is excellent and underused.

Nobody has a better group of receivers and nobody uses them to greater advantage. Starters Isaac Bruce and Torry Holt complement each other on long and intermediate routes and both excel in the crossing routes that are a staple of Martz's schemes. Az-Zahir Hakim is also dangerous, but too often his fumbles prove dangerous to his own team. Ricky Proehl and tight end Ernie Conwell also can be threats.

The offensive line is solid but thin. Tackles Orlando Pace and Ryan Tucker were 16-game starters, while guards Tom Nuten and Adam Timmerman and center Andy McCollum missed only one start among them. Martz moved backup guard Cameron Spikes to defense, so he isn't too worried about offensive line depth, where Pete Swanson, Mike Newell, Kaulana Noa and John St. Clair are without experience.

Offseason specials at K-Martz

Martz traded disgruntled defensive end Kevin Carter, once the best in the league, after a subpar season. Carter and cornerback Todd Lyght didn't feel they had properly cashed in on their Super Bowl success so both will work elsewhere. Also jettisoned were Super Bowl-tackling hero Mike Jones, tackle D'Marco Farr and safety Keith Lyle. Linebacker Todd Collins and safety Devin Bush also are vulnerable, leaving end Grant Wistrom, middle linebacker London Fletcher and cornerback Dexter McCleon as the only sure survivors.

The Rams hope ex-Giant Cedric Jones, Sean Moran and Leonard Little can replace Carter. Top draft choice Damione Lewis is an instant starter at tackle, and another No. 1 pick, Ryan Pickett, will join holdover Jeff Zgonina inside.

Besides his career high of 53 in receptions, Az-Zahir Hakim also led the NFC in punt returns with a 15.3-yard average. Perennial Pro Bowl cornerback Aeneas Williams (right) was the Rams' big offseason addition.

Smith brought unknown linebacker Don Davis with him from Tampa. Mark Fields was signed from New Orleans and Florida State linebackers Tommy Polley (second round) and Brian Allen (third) were high draft picks. Fletcher is solid in the middle.

A+ on Aeneas acquisition

Martz thinks obtaining Pro Bowl cornerback Aeneas Williams from Arizona will provide the same kind of spark for the defense that Faulk provided for the offense two years ago. McCleon, Dre Bly and second-year man Jacoby Shepherd give the Rams depth at corner. They signed free-agent safety Kim Herring from Baltimore to replace Lyle. Herring will be switching from strong safety to free. Arizona State's Adam Archuleta is another No. 1 pick who will get a shot at the strong safety job. Rich Coady can back up at both inside spots.

Placekicker Jeff Wilkins was re-signed after suffering a quadriceps injury. Since nobody scores more than the Rams, nobody kicks off more than Wilkins, so new special teams coach Bobby April wants to limit his repetitions in practice. More is expected from second-year punter John Baker. Hakim is an explosive punt returner. The Rams must replace kickoff returner Tony Horne, who rejoined Dick Vermeil in Kansas City in the Green deal. Backup running back Canidate is the favorite.

Substantive Saints have talent, but intangibles are now necessary to be a consistent contender.

It's hard to take the New Orleans Saints seriously. Force of habit tends to discount whatever they happen to accomplish, such as a totally unexpected NFC West title.

A closer glance reveals more substance. Under Coach of the Year Jim Haslett and Executive of the Year Randy Mueller, the Saints are laying a firmer foundation around the one player former coach Mike Ditka thought would get him to a Super Bowl, Ricky Williams. In fact, it is becoming so firm that the Saints believe they can get along fine whether or not Williams is along for the ride.

Aiming high

After breaking their unenviable streak of never winning a playoff game, the Saints figure not to wait another 33 years for their second postseason victory. Dethroning the world champion St. Louis Rams for their first-ever playoff win was a bonus that boosted confidence. Because they finished last season strong despite significant injuries (Williams included), fans are eager to see what a healthy team might do.

"I still think we have a way to go, but we have a good nucleus of players," Haslett says. "We have our whole offensive line intact. We have our whole defensive line intact. We'll have every starter back on offense, and we added (free-agent receiver) Albert Connell. With some of the guys coming back, like (tight end) Cam Cleeland, we can be better in a lot of areas."

Super Bowl contenders?

"Why not?" Haslett asks. "I don't know if there is an odds-on favorite in the NFC. I think it's open for anybody to win."

Enough good QBs for a controversy

On a team that has struggled for years to find a quarterback, the Saints think they have two in Jeff Blake and Aaron Brooks. After Blake fractured and dislocated his right foot in October, Brooks played so well that Haslett can't ignore a quarterback challenge entering this season.

While maintaining there will be no quarterback controversy, Haslett knows it is up to him to avoid one by making the quickest, most forceful decision possible. The loser will not be happy because both Blake and Brooks proved they can play at a high level. Haslett also likes third-stringer Jake Delhomme.

As for Williams, his goal should be to finish a season healthy, something that has eluded him in his first two tries. Both times, ankle problems kept him from fulfilling the potential Ditka envisioned when he traded his 1999 draft to land him. A broken left ankle as he reached his 1,000th yard kept Williams from any meaningful playoff role, but not before he established himself as the kind of threat who can carry a team. The Saints were disappointed when Williams did not join early offseason workouts and made the intriguing choice of running back Deuce McAllister in the draft's first round.

The Saints ousted the Rams from the playoffs without Williams or rookie blocking back Terrelle Smith, who was nursing back and shoulder injuries. Smith's health remains a question mark. Little Chad Morton also provides a nice change of pace to Williams, but McAllister is so versatile he can line up at receiver.

Also injured against the Rams was leading receiver Joe Horn, who wasn't good

PROJECTED STARTERS

Fifth-year safety Sammy Knight came of age last season, leading the Saints in tackles and interceptions.

Alex Molden and linebacker Mark Fields. Haslett believes he will be better without them.

Defensive end Darren Howard was outstanding as a second-round rookie and should avoid a sophomore slump on a line that included the league's top sacker in La'Roi Glover, run-stuffer Norman Hand and end Joe Johnson. No other front four in the division comes close. Willie Whitehead and Jared Tomich are good backups.

Haslett hopes the return of linebacker Charlie Clemons from injured reserve along with holdovers Darrin Smith and Keith Mitchell will continue to provide above-average play at linebacker, where rookie Sedrick Hodge, a third-round pick from North Carolina, will help.

The return of cornerback Steve Israel from a broken ankle will make up for the loss of Molden. Kevin Mathis, Fred Weary, Michael Hawthorne and Fred Thomas are the other corners, with Sammy Knight, ex-Seahawk Jay Bellamy, Chris Oldham and Rob Kelly at safety.

The Saints are taking applications for placekicker after cutting Doug Brien. Jeff Hall is the leading candidate. Toby Gowin is the punter. McAllister can help Morton return punts and kicks if necessary.

In his first year at the helm of the 49ers, mobile Jeff Garcia (top) broke the team's single-season yardage mark and threw three of his 31 touchdowns to J.J. Stokes, who led the team with an average of 17.1 yards per touch.

End declared to short rebuilding phase; the Niners are back to competing for a division title.

Face it, the 49ers are simply smarter than most other teams. Ignore them at your risk. While some teams require decades to "rebuild," the 49ers are clearly on their way back up after only two down seasons. Last year, General Manager Bill Walsh parlayed seven draft picks into 11 and came away with six players who became starters on a defense that gave up only 30 points in four wins down the stretch. This year, in his final draft before retiring, Walsh was content to add quality by trading up and getting the pass rusher he craved, Andre Carter.

They began this offseason by releasing veteran linebackers Ken Norton Jr. and Winfred Tubbs and letting 16-game starter at defensive end Anthony Pleasant and leading rusher Charlie Garner go in free agency. But the 49ers figure they don't need experience to win now. They are learning how to win with youth.

Elusive Garcia rocks Haight, 3Com

Walsh predicted before last season that unsung Jeff Garcia would finish among the top 10 passers in the league. Wrong again. Garcia not only finished in the top five, he broke the team's single-season yardage record held by Steve Young. It was a tribute to coach Steve Mariucci and to offensive coordinator Marty Mornhinweg, who got rewarded with the head-coaching job in Detroit.

Garcia's passing was complemented by his running and his ability to avoid the rush. He was sacked only 24 times in 561 pass attempts and his 5.8-yard rushing average was Young-like. Behind Garcia, the 49ers are inexperienced with second-year players

Tim Rattay and Giovanni Carmazzi, but this franchise obviously has a way of making quarterbacks. Overnight, Garcia has gone from stopgap to long-term.

Life without receiver Jerry Rice will be different, but not necessarily worse. Rice caught 75 passes, seven for touchdowns, but the 49ers are confident they can make up that production. Terrell Owens is a terror after the catch and third-year prospect Tai Streets finally appears healthy enough to challenge J.J. Stokes for a key role. Greg Clark is a very good tight end who hopes the injury bug is behind him. Justin Swift and Terrence Dupree are his backups.

Sorry, Charlie

Running back is an interesting position because the 49ers were resigned to part with the versatile and productive Garner in favor of the unknown. After accounting for nearly 1,800 yards rushing and receiving, Garner overpriced himself across the bay to Oakland, but coaches are confident he can be replaced. If second-year stud Paul Smith doesn't beat out Fred Beasley at fullback, he will be on the field at tailback. Third-year man Terry Jackson also looks ready to contribute more. Garrison Hearst remains a long shot to recover sufficiently from repeated leg surgeries. Third-round draft choice Kevan Barlow could step in as a rookie. Holdover Jonas Lewis is another possibility.

The offensive line looks strong and intact with tackles Derrick Deese and Scott Gragg, guards Ray Brown and Dave Fiore and center Jeremy Newberry. It is the most stable 49er line in years and was ignored in the draft. Matt Willig, Tyrone Hopson and Ben Lynch are the top reserves.

Defensive tackle Bryant Young is the All-Pro around whom the 49ers plan to build their defense. He led the team in sacks last year and continues to perform at a high level despite injuries and a lack of continuity

Walsh lamented that he hadn't been able to pair Young with a big-time pass rusher, so the 49ers were happy to trade up in the first round and land University of California defensive end Carter. Walsh hailed him as already superior to many pros because of his background as the son of former NFL

Carolina. He was NFC Defensive Player of the Year for his 15-sack career year in 1997 and would love to regain that form. Junior Bryant, second-year prospects John Milem and Cedric Killings and third-year suspect Reggie McGrew will try to fill in on the line with Young, Carter, Stubblefield and second-year starting end John Engelberger.

The defensive star of the last rookie class was pass-rushing linebacker Julian Peterson, who reminded 49er fans at times of Charles Haley. The 49ers signed young middle linebacker Derek Smith from the Redskins to replace Tubbs. Second-round rookie Jamie Winborn from Vanderbilt will replace Norton. Jeff Ulbrich, Jeff Posey and Artie Ulmer are backups.

Secondary flashback

Last season's secondary resembled the rookie-studded secondary of Ronnie Lott, Eric Wright and Carlton Williamson in 1981. First-year cornerbacks Ahmed Plummer and Jason Webster nailed down jobs during 2000, and fellow rookie John Keith played well enough to project as the starting strong safety for this season, with Lance Schulters moving to free safety. Ronnie Heard and Zack Bronson provide depth.

Chad Stanley is the punter. The 49ers are using training camp to find replacements for kicker Wade Richey and return man Kevin Williams. Draft choice Cedrick Wilson, a wide receiver from Tennessee, can return. ■ Receiver Terrell Owens was the 49ers' most dangerous man on the field last season, registering 22 plays covering 20 yards or more. Five of his 13 touchdowns covered 30 or more yards.

With the Weinke of an eye, the Panthers are changing directions yet again.

Overall, the Panthers are looking to overhaul. George Seifert didn't used to have to scramble like this in San Francisco, where players seemed to grow on trees. In one of the most baffling moves of the NFL offseason, Seifert released quarterback Steve Beuerlein. It's one thing to let go of offensive front. Seifert watched the New York Giants revamp their offensive line with veterans and get to the last Super Bowl. After giving up a whopping 69 sacks and nearly killing the immobile Beuerlein, the line didn't give Seifert much choice.

The heir apparent at quarterback is Jeff Lewis, who once was John Elway's heir apparent in Denver. On the field, he has never been given much of a chance to earn any accolades, nor has he done much in practice to force the hand of his coaches. So this is a huge gamble by Seifert, who has only Dameyune Craig, Matt Lytle and rookie Chris Weinke behind Lewis. Heisman Trophy winner Weinke is the oldest of the bunch at 28 and has no less NFL starting experience than any of the others. He's ecstatic about his chance to start.

Receiving stable stocked

The quarterback will be helped by the expected return from injury of tight end Wesley Walls and wide receiver Patrick Jeffers, whose absence left Beuerlein with only Muhsin Muhammad as a viable option. Muhammad responded by becoming one of the elite receivers in the league. Big and tough, Muhammad tied Indianapolis' Marvin Harrison with 102 catches to top the NFL. Donald Hayes and Isaac Byrd both showed promise at receiver. Walls is a huge part of the passing offense and is coming off major surgery at age 35. If he takes up where he left off in 1999, great, but it's a gamble.

Still an enigma is running back Tshimanga Biakabutuka, injury-prone and inconsistent after five years in the league. The Panthers will continue to try to find a suitable replacement. Last year's experiment with Natrone Means failed. Young Brad Hoover was a popular stopgap but may be more suited to fullback, where William Floyd was a salary-cap casualty. Chris Hetherington also is more of a fullback/utility back. The Panthers added Adrian Murrell with the hope that he could be the one to step up and be their feature back.

Jeno James is a second-year backup.

Clutch tight end Wesley Walls caught 31 passes in eight games before missing the rest of the season with a torn ACL.

Joe Montana the way Seifert did in San Francisco; it's quite another to come up with a Steve Young.

The way the Panthers played last year, it didn't really matter who was taking snaps from center. Seifert decided it's time to move to a different mind-set and start over. Last year, he added old defensive line veterans Reggie White, Eric Swann and Chuck Smith. This year, it's the offensive line.

O-line adds veteran beef

Minnesota's Todd Steussie, Miami's Kevin Donnalley and Baltimore's Jeff Mitchell will become new starters on the

This may be Tshimanga Biakabutuka's last year to prove that he can be a productive No. 1 back for the Panthers.

Muhsin Muhammad is the NFC's leading receiver over the past two seasons with 198 catches.

Seifert is starting over again on defense, where his one-year fling with old veterans resulted in no better than the league's 27th-ranked defense, not good enough to scare anybody. How the Panthers beat the high-scoring Rams twice remains a mystery. But despite the final retirement of White and Swann, there is suitable material left on the front to make the Panthers better. If Smith and Jason Peter recover from injury, Seifert has four ends from which to choose, including Jay Williams and Mike Rucker. Williams turned into the most reliable after arriving from St. Louis. Peter is coming off neck surgery, so his future is uncertain.

Inside, Sean Gilbert was adequate, though still not worth his inflated salary.

Brentson Buckner was signed from San Francisco and will push Tim Morabito to start. Free-agent find Al Lucas and second-year man Alvin McKinley also showed promise at tackle, and rookie Kris Jenkins will get a long look.

Dan's the new man on 'D'

Top draft choice Dan Morgan could line up at any linebacker spot and improve the defense. Seifert released Lee Woodall and is rebuilding with some combination of Morgan, Lester Towns, Dean Wells and Hannibal Navies. Kory Minor also could challenge.

Safety Mike Minter, the most important cog in an unsettled secondary, was re-signed. The Panthers made Rashard Anderson and Deon Grant their first two draft choices last year and neither panned out. Anderson got lost in the transition from corner to safety and Grant got hurt. If Anderson can't hack it at safety, he'll move to the corner, where the Panthers couldn't keep Eric Davis, leaving Doug Evans and Jimmy Hitchcock as shaky veteran starters. Deveron Harper is a nickel back who could figure in.

The Panthers welcome back injured placekicker John Kasay from serious knee surgery, but are taking a chance because last year's replacement, Joe Nedney, was outstanding and hooked on with Tennessee. Todd Sauerbrun is the new punter, replacing Ken Walter. Rookie Steve Smith from Utah will replace Michael Bates on returns, after the eight-year veteran was released in May.

Former 49er Brentson Buckner (left) arrives as a free agent to boost the Panthers' defensive line, while veteran placekicker John Kasay hopes to bounce back from the knee surgery that caused him to miss last season.

Aging Falcons roll the dice in hopes that their top pick will produce a few more Vick-tories.

The Falcons are getting older without getting better. It's a dangerous place for any team to find itself and nobody knows it more than coach Dan Reeves. More famous now as a spokesperson for heart medicine than a Super Bowl coach, Reeves admits he ponders retirement every year now. So the Falcons' trade to select top pick Michael Vick in the draft was designed to remind Reeves of his youth. In 1983, Reeves traded for rookie quarterback John Elway in Denver.

The Falcons are led by a 35-year-old quarterback, a 34-year-old receiver, a 36-year-old middle linebacker and a 40-year-old placekicker. Their best offensive lineman and best defensive back both turn 30 early in the season. When a team wins 14 games, as the Falcons did only three seasons ago, that is the only number that matters. When a team wins only five and four games the next two seasons, respectively, age catches up quickly.

Empty seats in the Georgia Dome are getting to be an old story as well, so owner Taylor Smith didn't need his arm twisted to invest in Vick, who arrives as the fastest quarterback in NFL history before he enters a huddle. He will not need to master a playbook or read a defense to roll out on the goal line.

Staff overhaul

Reeves overhauled his coaching staff in hopes of infusing fresh ideas. Defensive coordinator Rich Brooks unexpectedly quit and was replaced by young linebacker coach Don Blackmon. Offensive line coach Art Shell and defensive line coach Bill Kollar were replaced by college coaches Pete Mangurian and Bill Johnson, respectively.

Vick joins former Georgia quarterback Eric Zeier as conversation pieces, if not competition, for Chris Chandler. By all accounts, Vick is a project after only two years as a college player, and he doesn't play anywhere near the style of the immobile veteran. But Vick's style could change the way football is played.

Chandler again struggled with concussions and injuries that make the quarterback position critical for the short-term as well as long-term future of the franchise. When Chandler is healthy, he still throws a pretty pass, but last year's results were his worst in years and he was demoted to third-string at one point. Vick will test the patience of fans who will want to rush him into the lineup.

Jamal Anderson came back strong in 2000 to record his fourth 1,000-yard rushing season after missing almost all of the 1999.

Nineteenth on the NFL's all-time career passing yards list, Chris Chandler will devote much time this year to mentoring top draft pick Michael Vick.

Anderson came off a 1999 knee injury to become a 1,000-yard rusher again, but his 3.6-yard average indicates he's not the stud he was in 1998. Neither is undersized fullback Bob Christian, who takes a pounding. Maurice Smith backs up Anderson.

Help wanted: Deep threats apply

Chandler would benefit from a more consistent deep threat at receiver, but the Falcons have yet to find a suitable replacement for Tony Martin. Shawn Jefferson led the team in receptions after arriving from New England, but his 32-year-old legs aren't much younger than reliable possession veteran Terance Mathis. Tight end Reggie Kelly cost a first-rounder last year and the Falcons still spent a second-round pick this year on the position, selecting Alge Crumpler of North Carolina.

frustrated the Falcons' 30th-ranked attack. Left guard and center are trouble spots. Calvin Collins, Bob Hallen and Chris Banks all took turns at left guard last season opposite rookie right guard Travis Claridge. Todd McClure or rookie Robert Garza are expected to beat out Collins and Evan Pilgrim at center. Ephraim Salaam is the right tackle, but will get competition from Michael Thompson, who is coming off an Achilles injury. If this group gets it together under Mangurian, Anderson's rushing average will improve.

The defense struggled after season-ending injuries to linebackers Jessie Tuggle and Keith Brooking. Both are expected back strong, but Tuggle is one of the oldest linebackers in the league. Brooking's replacement, Chris Draft, played like he has a future. Antony Jordan has the inside track for departed Henri Crockett's job at strongside linebacker, with Draft, Mark Simoneau and Jeff Kelly also factors.

From left, linebacker Jessie Tuggle's age (36) and defensive end Patrick Kerney's dwindling production (2.5 sacks in 2000) are big concerns for the Falcon defense this preseason.

Defensive ends Patrick Kerney, Brady Smith and Chuck Wiley managed only 11 sacks among them, not enough for big-league pass rushers. Travis Hall, Shane Dronett and Ed Jasper were strong inside, but the Falcons remain one of the smallest defensive lines in the business, without a starter over 300 pounds.

Cornerback Ray Buchanan re-signed for big bucks and will lead a secondary of cornerback Ashley Ambrose and safeties Marty Carter, Gerald McBurrows, newcomer Chris Hudson and Ronnie Bradford. Newly signed cornerback Conrad Hamilton will play a backup role.

After losing reliable punter Dan Stryzinski to Kansas City, the Falcons signed Chris Mohr from Buffalo. Ageless Morten Andersen remains the placekicker, but the Falcons need to count on more than his long field goals to regain their status as contenders. Return man Tim Dwight was lost in the Vick trade, so Darrick Vaughn will return kickoffs and rookie Vinny Sutherland will get a shot at returning punts.

CFL

PREVIEW

'Pinball' Clemons

Damon Allen

Alouettes have look of favorite in league that needs to 'get real.'

By RICK MATSUMOTO
Toronto Star

First it was Doug Flutie. Then Jeff Garcia. Now add Dave Dickenson and Henry Burris to the list of Canadian Football League quarterbacks who have defected recently to the National Football League.

But that's nothing new. Some of the CFL's best talent—especially quarterbacks—has been going "home" for as long as players (who didn't make it the first time) have been coming north to hone their skills before getting a second chance at playing in the NFL.

Rose Bowl hero Warren Moon had to cross the 49th parallel to the Edmonton Eskimos to prove that blacks could be a professional team's on-field decision-maker. And Joe Theismann showed in his three years as a Toronto Argonaut that a quarterback doesn't have to be 6-foot-4 to be successful. Moon and Theismann eventually joined NFL teams, and the rest, as they say, is history.

While there are those who are lamenting that the latest group of departees to NFL camps further weakens an always-shaky CFL, new Commissioner Mike Lysko isn't one of them.

He says that for the CFL to expect keep the Fluties and Garcias with a $2.138 million (Canadian) salary cap per team, is absurd. Instead, he talks about positioning the league into its rightful niche and making a success of what it is already rather than constantly seeking to be a northern version of the NFL.

"The NFL is the best football league in the world," he says. "Let's face that fact."

Taking a half-full rather than a half-empty position, Lysko, who replaced Jeff Giles as league president and John Tory as commissioner, views the successful migration of CFL players to the NFL as a positive.

"I think we have access to better players and will continue to have access to better players because they know that in their option year they have a chance to go to the NFL," he says.

"Do I like to see our MVP (Calgary's Dickenson), Henry Burris and our rookies of the year of the last three seasons go to the NFL? The answer is, of course not.

"The upside of players leaving our league is that they are doing extremely well. Jeff Garcia goes to the NFL (from Calgary) and lights up that league with San Francisco. In my mind, that's good for our league. The same with Doug Flutie. These players continue to be the strong supporters and advocates of our league and what it did for them.

"It shows the level of football that we've got."

Lysko's approach is that the CFL should concentrate on being the world's "second-best" football league.

He believes the league should acknowledge its own stars such as ex-player and now Toronto Argonaut coach Mike "Pinball" Clemons—who was as much a household name in Canada as the top NHL hockey stars—rather than wringing hands over the loss of Flutie or Garcia or Dickenson.

"People forget that when Doug Flutie was in Toronto there wasn't exactly filled stands," he says. "He did not put people in the stands when he was in Calgary or in Vancouver."

Lysko thinks CFL teams and their fans should adopt the mentality of college football in the U.S. Despite the fact that their stars leave after four years, U.S. colleges have no difficulty filling the stands. Fans simply refocus their attention on the next crop of players and create new heroes.

The CFL has an advantage in that many of its marquee players—the like of Clemons, B.C. Lions quarterback Damon Allen, Montreal Alouettes running back Mike Pringle, etc.—do not necessarily depart. Many remain in the league for their entire careers.

And that, rather than the handful that make it in the NFL, is where the CFL should be concentrating its strategy. With increasing clicks of turnstiles around the league and television ratings that have risen more than 30 percent over the past three years, the CFL has sound blocks to build upon rather than worrying about the few bricks that have fallen by the way.

EASTERN DIVISION

The pressure is squarely on the backs of the Montreal Alouettes. The Grey Cup game returns to Montreal for the first time since 1985 and Alouette fans clearly expect their team to be in the championship game. Already, 55,000 tickets have been sold for the fall classic.

The fans have every right to expect the Als to be there. They, along with the Calgary Stampeders, have been one of the CFL's dominant teams since 1996, when the Baltimore Stallions of the ill-fated expansion attempt into the U.S. were reincarnated in Montreal. In the last five years the Als have never lost more than six games in a season. They've never finished worse than second and were first in the East the past two years. But it wasn't until last year that they finally advanced all the way to the Grey Cup game and then were upset 28-26 by the B.C. Lions.

General Manager Jim Popp, however, believes there's no more pressure on the team than has been there all along.

"Yes, we finally got over the hump last year by getting to the Grey Cup game, but going back to the Stallion (days), we've had a record that no other CFL franchise can match," he says. "The pressure will be the same to maintain that record."

At 72 years of age, Rod Rust takes over as head coach from Charlie Taaffe, who opted for the top assistant's job at the University of Maryland.

Rust appears to have just one major hole to fill—that left by the loss of All-Canadian cornerback Davis Sanchez to the San Diego Chargers. Imports Eric Riddick and Alphonso Roundtree will battle to replace Sanchez. Otherwise, he has the CFL's best running back in Mike Pringle at his disposal, along with quarterback Anthony Calvillo, who finally emerged as a top-caliber signal-caller last season. Glen Young, who was signed from Toronto as a free agent, will step into the line-backing corps. The secondary led by Barron Miles is strong.

Sherwood Swartz admits he made mistakes as a rookie owner last season. But he has taken bold steps to correct the errors of 2000, starting with the removal of J.I. Albrecht as the team's managing director. Also remedied is the head-coaching position, where Mike "Pinball" Clemons, who ended a brilliant nine-year career with the team in August to replace John Huard, returns for his first full season at the helm.

Under the euphoria of Clemons' enthusiastic leadership, the Argos made a belated run for the final playoff berth in the East, but fell a point short of Winnipeg. Now, with the adrenalin rush of last year's changes behind him, Clemons faces the stark reality of not only fielding a competitive team, but one that will bring fans back to the SkyDome. Aiding him with that task will be the Argos' all-time leading receiver, Paul Masotti, who retired at the end of the 1999 season but rejoined the team as general manager this winter.

The Argos are not without talent. In Derrell Mitchell, they have one of the CFL's best receivers. Last year he hauled in 100 passes for 1,398 yards, fourth in the league. In running back Mike Jenkins, Clemons might have a slightly heavier replica of himself. The 5-foot-7 University of Arkansas product gained 872 yards while playing just half of last season.

The re-signings of Johnny Scott and Roger Dunbrack and return of Tyrone Rodgers give the Argos a strong defensive line. At linebacker, the signing of highly sought free agent Michael O'Shea to go along with Calvin Tiggie will more than make up for the loss of Martavius Houston to the Washington Redskins and Glen Young to Montreal. Adding Orlando Steinhauer is a plus for the secondary.

The Argos' major concern remains at quarterback, where veteran Kerwin Bell will fight off challenges from holdover Jimmy Kemp and a host of younger players.

If there was a disappointing CFL team last year, it had to be the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. Coming off their 1999 Grey Cup victory over Calgary, the 'Cats should have been battling Montreal down to the wire for the right to represent the East in last fall's title game.

But after a quick 7-2 start, the Ti-Cats rolled over and played dead, going through the second half of the schedule with a reverse 2-7 record and finishing 9-9. Not the stuff of defending champions.

"After we went 7-2, the bottom fell out," says Ron Lancaster, Hamilton's head coach and general manager. "We never got it back to where it was."

Much of the problem was attributable to the loss of starting quarterback Danny McManus as well as his No. 1 backup, Cody Ledbetter. That forced Lancaster to employ rookies Billy Dickens and Todd Bankhead, which proved disastrous. Both were released at the end of the season.

With McManus and Ledbetter healthy, and the signing of University of Akron star Butchie Washington, the Tiger-Cats go into the season secure once again at quarterback. The offense, in general, is in solid shape. In Darren Flutie (Doug's little brother), the quarterbacks have one of the finest go-to receivers in the CFL.

It's the defense that concerns Lancaster. As training camp approached, he could name only four players who would be assured of starting jobs: all-star defensive end Joe Montford, the CFL's returning sack leader; linebacker Sean Woodson; safety Rob Hitchcock; and tackle Mike Philbrick, whose return was uncertain because of outside-job complications.

At press time, the secondary looked shaky: Gerald Vaughn was trying out with the New Orleans Saints, Orlando Steinhauer jumped to the Argonauts and Donald Smith had retired.

Like their next-door neighbors, the Saskatchewan Roughriders, the Winnipeg Blue Bombers dipped into the backup quarterback pool of a CFL rival and came away with Khari Jones from the B.C. Lions. And, like the Riders, they found themselves with an excellent young starting signal-caller.

Fortunately for the Bombers, the similarities end there. Unlike the Riders, who lost star QB Henry Burris to the NFL, the Bombers have managed to hang on to Jones, who threw 31 TD passes last season, second-most in the league.

The problem, however, is the Bombers are having difficulty hanging on to the targets for Jones' passes. Albert Johnson, who won Rookie-of-the-Year honors and led the league in all-purpose yards, jumped to the Miami Dolphins, while Geroy Simon (51 catches, 725 yards) signed with Kansas City Chiefs and Robert Gordon (89 for 1,395) went to the XFL. On top of that, veteran Milt Stegall, the Bombers' second-leading receiver with 78 catches for 1,499 yards, was holding out for more money when camp began.

All that adds up to the team's head coach and director of football operations, Dave Ritchie, looking over a field of fresh, hopefully eager, talent.

"I feel like we're young again," Ritchie says. "We were young last year and we almost went to the show. Young guys will play hard. If they don't, they'll be hanging their hats somewhere else."

Ritchie is expecting holdover Markus Howell and free-agent signee Andre Arlain to allow him to use two Canadian receivers, while rookies Wendell Montgomery, Jarvonn Jackson, Daryle Heidelberg and Geoff Drover compete for one import spot alongside Stegall.

Veteran center Dave Vankoughnet is retired, but Ritchie is confident his offensive line, anchored by 305-pound Dave Mudge and Moe Elewonibi, will be strong.

The Bomber defense will also sport some young faces, but veteran linebackers Lamar McGriggs and Brian Clark, along with all-star free safety Tom Europe and halfback Juran Bolden, will supply the stabilizing influence.

WESTERN DIVISION

The Lions won 13 games in 1999, but saw their Grey Cup aspirations vanish when they stumbled in the Western Final. So there was really no reason to think that after a disappointing 8-10 regular-season run last year, which included a midseason coaching change, the B.C. Lions would be taking part in their first Grey Cup bash of the new millennium.

But not only were they in the championship game, the Lions ended up guzzling champagne from Earl Grey's antique mug with a 28-26 win over everyone's choice, the Montreal Alouettes.

Now, Lions head coach Steve Burrato, who replaced Greg Mohns after six games last summer, faces the task of regrouping his charges as they attempt to defend that title. There's no reason to believe the Lions can't be back in the show seeking to win back-to-back Grey Cups for the first time in their existence.

Ageless quarterback Damon Allen, who threw for a league-leading 4,840 yards last year, returns to provide the offensive leadership. In the backfield he'll again have the powerhouse combination of Robert Drummond and Sean Millington to turn to. The pair rushed for a combined 1,833 yards and picked up another 1,283 yards as receivers.

Alfred Jackson, who caught 59 passes for 1,119 yards and 12 touchdowns, heads the receiving corps, which will likely be without Jimmy "The Jet" Cunningham, who opted for the XFL and won't be invited back.

The biggest missing ingredient from the Lions' lineup will be punter/placekicker Lui Passaglia, who announced his retirement after 26 seasons prior to the Grey Cup and promptly kicked the Cup-winning field goal as his swan song.

Herman Smith, who led B.C. with seven sacks, re-signed with the Lions and will anchor the defensive line along with veteran Daved Benefield. Eric Carter, who topped the Lions with seven interceptions last year, returns, but Central McClellion, who had five picks, will be missed. He's looking for an NFL opportunity.

Nealon Greene's arrival as a complete quarterback—not just a scrambler with 4.4 speed—has turned the Eskimos into a Western contender once again.

"His development is what we anticipated when we got him," says Don Matthews, Edmonton's head coach and general manager. "He's going to be the next big, exciting quarterback in our league."

Matthews insists Greene had a strong arm all along, but like all young pivots he had to learn to read defenses and get to know his receivers. And until that happened last season, he relied on his speed and got labeled as a "running quarterback." But he finally appeared to mature into an all-around QB in 2000, as underscored by the fact he threw 22 TD passes while giving up just six interceptions.

"That's a striking example of how he's matured," Matthews says. "To throw just six interceptions at age 24 is truly amazing."

Matthews is in the enviable position of having to make few changes to a squad that finished last season with a 10-7 record.

The biggest loss was hard-nosed running back Mark Nohra, who earned a tryout with the Washington Redskins after rushing for 760 yards in Edmonton. Matthews also released aging running back Troy Mills and picked up Toronto Argonaut free agent Ryan Terry, who will be the team's featured back.

Terry Vaughn, with 94 receptions for 1,216 yards last year, leads a fine receiving corps that includes one of the real CFL finds of 2000, former Florida State star Kez McCorvey, along with Rick Walters and Canadian Nigel Williams.

Linebacker Grant Carter and Henry "Gizmo" Williams, a wide receiver and the CFL's all-time leading kickoff and punt return man, have retired. But Matthews has adequate veterans to take their place.

For the first time since ... well, it seems like since dinosaurs roamed Alberta ... the Stampeders appear to be heading into the season without a proven, front-line quarterback.

In 1996, when a financially struggling Stampeders franchise could no longer afford Doug Flutie, and let him go to Toronto, there was Jeff Garcia ready to step into the breach. Then, when Garcia bolted to the San Francisco 49ers in 1999, Dave Dickenson took over and promptly took Calgary to a Grey Cup triumph. But now that they've lost Dickenson to the San Diego Chargers, Stampeders GM and head coach Wally Buono finds the quarterback shelf of his cupboard bare.

"We'll get a quarterback," assures Buono, who spent the late winter and early spring weeks scouring NFL Europe camps and XFL games. "We've talked to a lot of people. We'll also look for a quarterback who may be cut because of the NFL salary cap."

Buono also lost a handful of players to the XFL, including running back Kelvin Anderson, the league's third-leading rusher last year with 1,048 yards on 263 carries. Others who jumped to the "rassling league" included defensive backs Marvin Coleman and Jackie Kellogg and wide receiver Travis Moore. There was a chance that some may have returned to Calgary after the XFL season ended in April.

Buono had every reason to be confident that replacements could be found. All he had to do was point to Marc Boerigter, who came out of unheralded Hastings College and showed last year that he could well become a star in this league, with 63 catches for 1,092 yards. He'll be the go-to receiver for whoever lines up at quarterback, especially if Moore doesn't return.

One familiar figure who won't be back is Allen Pitts, the CFL's all-time leading receiver who at age 38 has finally reached the end of the line. Fullback Duane Forde signed with Hamilton, while defensive end Shonte Peoples accepted an offer from division rival Saskatchewan.

Fred Childress, Jamie Crysedale and Thomas Rayam will be the mainstays of the offensive line, especially if all-star Rocco Romano follows through with retirement plans.

Marvin Graves came to the CFL in 1994 hailed as the Argonauts' quarterback of the future. But the future never arrived for the former Syracuse University star in Toronto.

Now, seven years and three teams later, he gets another chance to prove he can be a starter in this league. Barring a complete flop on his part or a trade that brings the team an experienced QB, Graves should be calling the signals when the Roughies open their season.

Graves' opportunity comes following the departure of star Henry Burris to the Green Bay Packers after just one memorable season in a Rider jersey. Obtained from Calgary as a free agent prior to last season, Burris threw for the second-most yards (4,647) in the league last season, attracting attention from a number of NFL clubs.

Ironically, the QB position is the only hole coach Danny Barrett will have to fill on offense. Curtis Marsh, the league's leading receiver last season with 102 catches for 1,560 yards, returns along with Dan Farthing and Demetris Bendross. Eric Guliford, who had 1,084 yards receiving, is expected to be back after a stint in the XFL.

Darren Davis, a slashing runner who picked up 1,024 yards in his rookie season, can be expected to supply more of the same.

Defense is where the Riders could be in trouble. Demetrious Maxie, who jumped to the Riders after four seasons in Toronto, moved on again, this time to the Chicago Bears. Also NFL-bound was linebacker R-Kal Truluck, who hopes to catch on with the St. Louis Rams.

If the Riders can sign Marvin Coleman, who played out his option with Calgary before going to the XFL, it will certainly bolster a young secondary as well as the return game. ■

SEVERE DRIVING CONDITIONS

- Stop-and-go traffic
- Short trips
- Urban freeway driving
- Prolonged idling

If any of these driving conditions apply, then you may need to change your motor oil more frequently than the suggested interval for normal driving conditions.

CHANGING ENGINE OIL

1. Park the vehicle on a level surface and apply the parking brake.
2. Start the engine and let it idle until it reaches operating temperature, then turn it off.
3. Remove the oil filler cap.
4. Place a large drain pan under the drain plug.

May we suggest a little light reading next time you're sitting in traffic.

Everyday driving is harder on your engine than you think. For proof, look no further than your owner's manual. That's why Pennzoil® with PureBase® is formulated to protect against the harshness of stop-and-go driving conditions. In fact, we protect more engines from this torture than any other motor oil. We can't change the way you have to drive, but we can protect you from it.
